LIST OF QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

THE HONOURABLE MR. DATTATRAYA VENKATESH BELVI.
1. Is it a fact that the Collector of Bijapur has recently issued an order to the Bijapur City Municipality under section 173 (c) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, stopping all "further expenditure of any kind", "except for fixed recurring charges" without the Collector's approval, and that in consequence urgent sanitary works such as drains and improvements to public roads and the like have been suspended? Collector's order to Bijapur Municipality.	1. As the Municipality failed to provide sufficient amount in its budget in order to pay the charges due to Government in connection with the maintenance of the water-works, the Collector pointed out to the Municipality its omission to reserve the amount due to Government before incurring fresh expenditure on other objects, and requested the President of the Municipality to stop further expenditure on works, the liability for which had not already been incurred until an amount of not less than Rs. 30,000 had been accummulated at once and another of Rs. 15,000 before the close of the year. Bijapur Municipality's application to Collector for land for Kanarese School.	3. As the Municipality had ill-advisedly spent money for the provision of temporary accommodation for its Kanarese School which was totally unsuited for the purpose, the Collector declined to recommend the grant to the Municipality of Government land, free of rent, on which a portion of the new building has been constructed, unless steps were taken by the Municipality to get a proper plan and estimate for the building prepared by the Executive Engineer, Bijapur District, and approved by the Educational Inspector, S. D.

5. Will Government be pleased to state:—

Medical schools. Lady students.

(a) What is the number of lady students studying in the various medical schools in the Presidency?

5. (a) Thirteen, viz., 10 at Poona, 2 at Ahmedabad and 1 at Hyderabad (Sind).

(b) Are there any special changes in the syllabus of studies suitable for them?

(b) No.

(c) Are any special facilities provided for them in these schools to specialise in the diseases of women and children either before the final examination or after?

(c) Yes, special facilities are given to them (except at Hyderabad (Sind)) to study diseases of women and children before they pass out of the school.

6. (a) Is it a fact that all trained teachers in the primary schools of the Presidency do not yet get the pay that is shown on their certificates?

Minimum code pay of trained primary teachers.

(b) If so, in what districts are they still receiving less than the code pay?

(c) How much more expense would be annually incurred in order to give every trained primary teacher his minimum code pay?

6. Inquiries are being made.

7. Is it a fact (i) that Messrs. MacMillan and Co. have recently increased the prices of the Departmental Vernacular Readers and their other sanctioned books with the permission of Government and that this increased price has been allowed to be levied even on the sale of stocks already in their possession and not merely on new editions to be printed hereafter; (ii) and that, on the other hand, some other authors and publishers whose books are on the sanctioned list and who asked for permission to increase their prices have been

Increase in price of sanctioned books.

7. (i) Permission has not been given to Messrs. MacMillan and Company to increase the price of sanctioned books published by them except in the case of the Departmental Vernacular Readers. With regard to these Readers the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to Press Notes Nos. 3132, dated the 12th December 1916, and 471, dated the 24th February 1917, from which it will be seen that owing to the current high prices of paper and cloth the prices of these Readers, which are to be issued in future in paper-bound editions only, have been increased with effect from allowed to do so only as regards new editions to be printed hereafter and not in the case of existing stocks?	January 1917. As there are considerable stocks of the cloth-bound editions of these Readers either in hand or under orders and as it would be anomalous to sell cloth-bound copies at cheaper rates than paper-bound copies, Messrs. MacMillan and Company have been permitted to sell the former at the same prices as those now sanctioned for the latter. This has had the effect of slightly increasing the prices of the existing stocks of the cloth-bound Readers. (ii) Other publishers and authors, who have applied for permission to enhance the price of sanctioned books on account of high price of paper and cloth, have also been granted permission to increase, at a reasonable rate, the price of new editions, i. e., of editions printed and bound at war prices. These prices are to be reduced again when the edition is exhausted (provided the price of paper has then fallen). It will thus be seen that the principle followed is the same for all, viz., that the stocks to be sold in 1917 would be printed on paper purchased at war prices.

Supplementary Question.

The Hon'ble Mr. PARANJPYE:—Is it a fact that Messrs. MacMillan & Co. had no stock of copies of the paper-bound editions with them?

The Hon'ble Mr. CHAUBAL:—The answer to that supplementary question is contained in the answer which Government have already given. The point is that the price of the paper-bound edition is less than that of the cloth-bound edition and for such copies as they had in stock of the paper-bound issues they have been permitted to add a little higher price.

8. APPENDIX F.

The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Company, Limited.

(Incorporated in England.)

AGENT'S OFFICE.
Rayapuram, Madras, N. E.,
2nd/5th February 1917.

No. 2234/1690—T.

To

The Secretary to the Government of Bombay,
Public Works Department, Bombay.

Sir,

Your No. 92-Ry., dated 24th January 1917.

With reference to your letter No. 1522-Ry. dated the 14th December 1916, forwarding a copy of question No. 2 put by the Honourable Mr. P. A. Desai at the Meeting of the Legislative Council held in Bombay on the 4th December 1916 and of the answer given thereto, on the subject of irregular arrivals and departures of passenger trains between Gadag and Hotgi, I have the honour to inform you that, in the majority of cases, the late arrivals of trains at Gadag were mainly due to late connections with the G. I. P. Railway, and for which this Company's trains were detained at Hotgi Station. The attention of the G. I. P. Railway has been drawn to the late arrivals of their trains.

2. As regards the late arrivals of trains in the opposite direction in November and December last, they were principally due to Engineering speed restrictions rendered necessary by breaches of the line and were therefore unavoidable.

3. The running of these trains is receiving careful attention.

I have, etc.,
(Signed) A. B. STRANGE,
Agent.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY.

(Incorporated in England.)

Agent's Office,
Victoria Terminus,
Bombay, 24th January 1917.

No. 20—Q-2.

The Secretary to Government,
Public Works Department (Railway), Bombay.

Sir,

Regarding Indian food licenses and Refreshment Rooms at stations.

With reference to your letter No. 1545-Railway, dated the 20th December 1916, I give below the reply to question No. 12 put by the Honourable Mr. S. D. Garud at the meeting of the Legislative Council held in Bombay on the 4th December 1916:—

(a) Attached is a statement showing the G. I. P. Railway stations in the Bombay Presidency at which licenses have been granted for the sale of Indian food-stuffs, tea, coffee, aerated waters, etc., and the fees charged per annum for the same. The G. I. P. Railway has no fixed scale of rates to be charged for licenses to sell Indian food-stuffs and provisions at Railway stations.

Some years ago it was the custom to put the license up to auction every year; this had a tendency to raise the fees owing to rival tenderers bidding against one another, and it was decided to continue the licenses from year to year to the holders provided they gave satisfaction. When a license falls vacant, tenders are invited. On receipt of these, preference is given to local residents, and a reference as to their status and suitability for the post of licensees is then made to the Civil authorities and the best man is then selected, irrespective as to whether his tender is the highest or not, the fee being the same as was previously paid.

If in renewing a license there is reason to believe that the fee previously charged was such as was liable to affect the quality of the articles sold, a lower fee is fixed.

(b) The total amount received from Indian Lessees at G. I. P. Railway stations in the Bombay Presidency for 66 licenses for the sale of food, fruit, sweetmeats, tea, coffee, etc., during the last official year is Rs. 17,080.

(c) The total amount received for licenses from 13 Refreshment Rooms was Rs. 6,379.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
(Sd.) FRANK J. CLARK, Secretary.

Prescription of the Vernacular (or English) School Final Examination as an additional qualifying educational test for officiators in kulkarni—.

GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

Order No. 10676.

Bombay Castle, 8th November 1916.

Letter from the Commissioner, S. D., No. 3705 dated 7th September 1916 :—

Commissioner, S. D.'s No. 5656 dated 30th December 1915.
Belgaum Collector's No. W. T. N.—12 dated 28th August 1916.
Bijápur Collector's No. C.—1510 dated 13th March 1916.
Dhárwár Collector's No. T.—433 dated 1st April 1916.

"I have the honour to forward herewith copies of the marginally noted correspondence* and to recommend that the Vernacular (or English) School Final Examination should be prescribed as an additional qualifying educational test for kulkarnis.

"2. In Government Resolution, Revenue Department, No. 7688 dated 18th August 1914 Government have remarked that, in addition to watandárs who have passed the kulkarnis' test, all persons who have passed any examination down to and including the Vernacular Final Examination are qualified to officiate. The kulkarnis' test prescribed under Government Resolutions Nos. 6031 dated 15th August 1883, 8420 dated 15th November 1883 and 3686 dated 8th May 1884 is as follows:—

(a) Reading and writing the vernacular of the district;

(b) Mathematics up to simple interest;

(c) Knowledge of account forms;

(d) Capability to draft a short report regarding something that has taken place in the village;

(e) A knowledge of the rules for the inspection of field boundary marks;

(f) A knowledge of Cattle Trespass Act and rules thereunder;

(g) A paper on that part of the Land Revenue Code and subsidiary rules which concern the duties of the village officers at the discretion of the Collector.

Of these (c), (e), (f) and (g) are departmental subjects: the rest of the present test is, as will be seen above, extremely light and is not sufficient to secure men sufficiently educated for the proper performance of Government duties in the best interests of Government and the rayats. The test so far as it covers departmental knowledge is useful, but it exacts no standard of intelligence and I consider that no kulkarni should be considered fit unless he has also passed the Vernacular (or English) School Final Examination. We should find very few English School Final men, but a large number pass the Vernacular School Final each year, and where we have such materials to our hand, I consider we should make use of them in the interest of efficient administration.

"3. It is essential that we should have educated men in the future and not the half-educated men whom we have accepted in the past, who have been able to pass the simple test which is still enforced and is no longer suitable to present conditions."

ORDER.—The recommendation made by the Commissioner, S. D., in paragraph 1 of his letter is sanctioned. The proposed test should be made obligatory with effect from 1st January 1918 in the case of appointments of representative watandár kulkarnis serving in person, but for deputies it should be adopted from 1st January 1917.

Grant of permission to Muhammadan employés of Government to say Juma prayers on Fridays.

No. 1768.

GENERAL DEPARTMENT.

RESOLUTION OF GOVERNMENT.

The question whether it is necessary to allow leave for an hour or two on Fridays to Muhammadan employés of Government to enable them to say their Juma prayers has recently been under the consideration of Government.

2. The Governor in Council is of opinion that no hard and fast rule need be laid down, as the conditions prevailing in different parts of the Presidency vary, and any general direction may interfere with the satisfactory working of the machinery of Government. At the same time it is desirable that reasonable facilities should be granted to all communities to perform their religious duties, and His Excellency in Council is accordingly pleased to direct that permission should be given on Fridays to such Muhammadan employés of Government as ask for it to say their Juma prayers on the understanding that they make up the time by working extra hours during the week, if necessary. The imposition of this condition is, in the opinion of Government, necessary in the best interests of the Muhammadan community at large.

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON BILL No. V OF 1916.

We, the members of the Select Committee appointed to consider and report on the Bill further to amend the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879 (Bill No. V of 1916), have the honour to report as follows :—

2. In our opinion the scope of the amendment proposed to be made in the proviso to section 21 of the Act by clause 2 of the Bill, extending its operation to persons in temporary employment, should be restricted so as to exclude such persons in temporary employment as are in receipt of a monthly salary exceeding a certain pecuniary limit or are engaged for a definite period exceeding a certain limit of time. We recommend that the pecuniary limit should be fixed at one hundred and fifty rupees and the limit of time at six months.

3. We have no observations to make on the rest of the Bill and consider that it may be passed into law accordingly.

(Minute of dissent of the Honourable Dewan Bahadur K. R. Godbole.)

I think the word "non-pensionable" should be inserted before the words "officers and servants" in clauses 3 and 6 and before the words "pilots" and "officers and servants" in clause 7 of this Bill. The gratuities for widows and children referred to in these clauses are evidently intended to be given with the object of placing the subscribers to the Bombay Port Trust Provident Fund on the same footing as Railway Provident Funds. Such gratuities to widows and children are not allowed in the case of pensionable officers and servants of Government and it is certainly not intended to place the pensionable officers and servants of the Port Trust on a more favourable footing than the pensionable officers and servants of Government. Though the Bombay Port Trust has stopped pensions and started a Provident Fund instead for its employés, the Board still have powers to grant pensions, etc., vide sections 22 (5) and 50 (3) of the Act. Hence I think that it is necessary to insert the word "non-pensionable" in the manner proposed by me.

23th December 1916.

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON BILL No. VIII OF 1916.

We, the members of the Select Committee appointed to consider and report on the Bill to amend the law for the inspection and management of boilers and prime-movers in the Presidency of Bombay (Bill No. VIII of 1916), have the honour to report as follows :—

2. The principal alteration which we have to suggest is in respect of the examining agency for engineers' certificates (clauses 22, 23 and 27 of the Bill as introduced). The Bill makes provision for the appointment of one or more examiners and it is explained in the Statement of Objects and Reasons that the amendment was intended to facilitate the appointment of a full-time examiner in the place of the board of examiners, constituted by the present Act (Bom. Act II of 1891), which is convened from time to time as occasion may require. The main objects with which the appointment of a full-time examiner was proposed were to enable the examiner to scrutinise the candidates' applications and to inspect registered workshops, and it was also desired to secure a more uniform standard of examination. The examination can merely ensure that a candidate has a thorough theoretical knowledge of his subject. That it does so at present is proved by the value attached both here and elsewhere to certificates granted in the Bombay Presidency. The simultaneous examination at Karachi under the present system is no doubt a disadvantage but the committee appointed in 1909 perhaps gave undue weight to this point. The variation in standard resulting from the periodical changes in the personnel of the board of examiners is an objection which could be urged with equal force against many examinations held in this country. The defects in the viva-voce examination which existed in 1909 have now been removed and ample time is allowed. The scrutiny of candidates' applications is now efficiently performed, and as regards the examination of workshops, there is no reason why the Chief Inspector should not visit them and report to the examining board whether the training is satisfactory. Indeed it seems undesirable that the examiner should inspect them. We consider therefore that the examination as now conducted satisfactorily serves its purpose. We find however that the present tendency is to attach far less importance than formerly to examination as a test of the practical knowledge of a candidate and his competency to be in charge of a boiler. The important point is that he should receive training at an institution where he will have the opportunity of acquiring that knowledge. This object will however be secured to some extent if the recommendations made by the committee on the subject are embodied in the rules, and would not be facilitated by altering the examining body. We understand that public opinion is not in favour of a full-time examiner. On the whole therefore we are not convinced of the need for appointing a full-time officer and we doubt whether the extra expense involved would be justified. We have accordingly restored the provisions relating to the board of examiners. The appeal which was newly introduced by clause 27 (of the Bill as published), in view of the fact that decisions would be passed by a single examiner, will no longer be required and we have accordingly omitted that clause.

3. The existing Act and the Bill as introduced are designed to apply of their own force to boilers, but both contain provisions enabling Government by notification to make them applicable to prime-movers. The existing Act has never in fact, we understand, been applied to prime-movers and from the information at our command we gather that there is no likelihood that any occasion will arise for such extension of the law. We therefore propose that clause 42 (of the Bill as introduced) should be deleted and the necessary consequential changes made in clauses 2 and 3, the preamble and title.

4. The definition of owner in clause 3 has been expanded to include persons who may hold boilers on loan: the United Provinces Act No. III of 1915, section 2 (2), provides for this contingency, which may occur.

5. Clause 10 (1), (b).—As it is not always possible to obtain from the makers of boilers the original certificates of tests of the material out of which the boilers are made, such as steel plates, provision has been made for the acceptance of signed copies of these certificates.

6. Clause 26, sub-clauses (1), (2) and (3) of the Bill as introduced.—It is no longer necessary to retain these sub-clauses, as the persons who are likely to be affected by these provisions must be very few and diminishing in number, and under the slightly amended proviso to clause 43 of the original Bill (now clause 40), certificates granted under the Bombay Boiler Inspection Acts of 1873, 1887 and 1891 are to be deemed to have been granted under the provisions of the new Act. A consequential amendment has been made in clause 31 (now clause 30).

7. Clause 39 of the Bill as introduced.—This provision may be repealed as the Bombay Boiler Inspection Act, 1891, has been extended throughout the Presidency.

8. The remaining alterations which we have made are formal and do not require explanation.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE.

The Honourable Mr. RAGHUNATH PURUSHOTTAM PARANJPYE:—My Lord,—I wish to move that "this Council places on record its sense of the great loss it has sustained in the death of the Honourable Mr. W. H. Sharp, the Director of Public Instruction, who was for many years a member of this Council and endeared himself to all his colleagues by the ability, eloquence and fairness which invariably characterised his work here and elsewhere."

My Lord, when last December we met in this Council none of us thought for a moment that we were not to meet him for the next meeting also. His death came so suddenly upon us that all of us felt that the presidency and this Council in particular had sustained a very great loss. Mr. Sharp's career in this presidency was a long and distinguished one. Coming to this presidency as a Professor in the Elphinstone College he endeared himself to all his pupils by his great sympathy with the student world and their aspirations. He was a very efficient Professsor of Logic and Moral Philosophy in the first place and afterwards of English Literature, and the very fine humour with which he was gifted made his teaching both interesting and instructive. He was afforded a wider sphere of action when eight years ago he was appointed Director of Public Instruction and in this position he made a mark on the whole department the effect of which will remain for a considerable time to come. He was almost, one might say, too efficient as a Director of Public Instruction, leaving nothing for his assistants to do. He knew his whole department through and through, and on any question which you might put to him on any point he was always ready with a detailed answer. I myself had occasion to differ from him on several points, and to cross swords with him both in the University Senate and in this Council, and I can bear witness to the very great fairness with which he always replied to any question or discussed any subject. He was in this Council, as everybody will agree with me, probably the most eloquent speaker of this assembly and the way in which he put things before the Council left nothing to be desired. He was, as I said, gifted with a very great fund of humour which made the most dry subjects lively, and in fine the death of Mr. Sharp has left a great void in the educational world of this presidency. I am sure the Members of the Council will echo the feelings which I have at the great loss which this Council has sustained and I hope this Council will accept this resolution.

MR. SHARP'S DEATH.

[13TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Raghunath Purushottam Paranjpye; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; Mr. Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer.]

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the proposition so ably put before the Council by my honourable friend Mr. PARANJPYE.

The Honourable Mr. EBRAHIM HAROON JAFFER:—Your Excellency,—I associate myself wholeheartedly with all that has been said by the Hon'ble Mover with regard to the loss the presidency has sustained by the untimely and sad death of Mr. Sharp. Those who came in close contact with the late Director of Public Instruction or had opportunities of watching his work could not but be struck by the many estimable qualities of the head and the heart he possessed.

The arduous administrative duties the Director of Public Instruction is called upon to perform do not often suit the temperament and the habits of men long accustomed to the work of the professorial chair. But Mr. Sharp when he became Director threw himself heart and soul into his new work and soon acquainted himself with the ins and outs of it. His singleness of purpose, his devotion to duty, and his untiring energy made him an admirable head of the Educational Department. His penetrating eyes detected evils which might escape other observers and he hated sham as he discerned and rewarded merit.

Mr. Sharp carefully examined every proposition of educational reform that was placed before him and if it was sound and concerned in the interests of progress, one could always count upon his sympathy. He realised that the question of the education of the Mahomedan community required special treatment and was ever ready to render help in promoting it. Mr. Sharp warmly supported the cause of the several Mahomedan Educational Conferences held in Poona, and complied with the wishes of the Mahomedan community in many ways, especially in the matter of the appointment of four Mahomedan Deputy Inspectors, two of whom were for Urdu schools and an Inspectress for Urdu Girls' schools. Had he been spared, I feel sure, Mr. Sharp would have done more for the spread and improvement of Moslem education and I hope his traditions will be maintained by the Educational Department. It is really the misfortune of the presidency that Mr. Sharp should have been snatched away from it by death long before his time.

MR. SHARP'S DEATH.

[13TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Pheroze C. Sethna; Mr. Siddhanath Dhonddev Garud; the President; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel.]

The Honourable Mr. PHEROZE C. SETHNA:—Your Excellency,—I crave permission to say a few words in support of this resolution. I had only known the late Honourable Mr. Sharp since my nomination to this Council, but as we chanced to occupy adjoining seats during the Council Meetings I claim that I had perhaps more opportunities of coming into contact with him than most of the other non-official members. He was somewhat of a retiring disposition but one's liking for him and respect for his many admirable qualities steadily increased on closer acquaintance. There was a composedness about him which no petty irritations could ruffle and under a calm and courteous exterior and behind that innate modesty so characteristic of him there lay the utmost warmth of heart. The Department over which he presided was at times subjected to severe criticism in this Council but he was always a host in himself and a disputant whose power in debate we fully recognised. His speeches always displayed a close grasp of the questions he handled and as the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE has observed he possessed besides that rare and happy gift of humour in his remarks heightened with the touch of sarcasm which was nonetheless successful because such remarks never carried the sting of malignity in them. His premature death is undoubtedly a loss to this Council which I deplore in common with the previous speakers.

The Honourable Mr. SIDDHANATH DHONDDEV GARUD:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the resolution put before the Council by the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE. I had the privilege of knowing Mr. Sharp from the time when he was one of my professors in the Deccan College and it is difficult to forget his invariable kindness and courtesy as a professor. I knew him afterwards in several walks of life and I always found him very courteous, very kind and always willing to advance the educational interests of the presidency.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—It only remains for me on behalf of Government to endorse every word which the Honourable Mover of the resolution and other Honourable Members have said with regard to the loss that Government, and I am sure non-official members too as personal friends, will feel at the death of Mr. Sharp. May I say that it has been a very particular satisfaction to me to feel that this resolution has been proposed by an Honourable Member who is a non-official member of this Council and who, as Head of one of the greatest colleges in this presidency, used to come into very continual touch with Mr. Sharp? It is a very great satisfaction indeed to learn that, notwithstanding some differences of opinion between them, the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE always held such a very high opinion of the late lamented Director of Public Instruction. I can only say on behalf of Government that we feel very strongly indeed that we have lost one who was a most devoted servant of Government, who gave his best years and his best services for the education of the youths of this country, and whose skill in debate we all knew so well. Those of us who were, as many of us were, personally acquainted with Mr. Sharp will, I feel sure, miss and miss deeply his personal friendship, his kindly personality and that sense of humour which we all used to expect from him. Government have lost a servant of whom it can be truly said that he died doing his best service for the young students of this country and I am certain each and every one of us feels that by his death we have lost a real and true personal friend. I will ask Honourable Members to pass this resolution by rising in their seats.

The resolution was unanimously passed, the members rising in their seats.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Presentation of the Revised Financial Statement of the Government of Bombay for 1917-18. The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL.—Your Excellency,—Before we proceed further, I beg to move, under rule 7 of the Rules for the conduct of business in the Legislative Council that the business of presentation of the revised financial statement of the Government of Bombay for the year 1917-18 be adjourned.

My Lord, I must at the start ask Your Excellency's Government and the members of this Council to approach the consideration of this motion as they do in respect of all other motions. No doubt, the motion is of a rather unusual character and should not be brought forward if one could help it, but when you know the circumstances I shall in a moment tell you which have compelled me to put it before you, every one of you will agree with me that the course which I am pursuing is the only course left to me.

I am one of those who believe that the expenditure on the administration of this presidency is top-heavy and ways and means must be found to reduce it at an early date. I have given some thought and time to the question and I have my own views in the matter. When I was elected by the non-official members of this Council to the Finance Committee, the very first idea that struck me was that I should bring my proposals in a concrete form for the consideration of that Committee. I, therefore, got several proposals ready and attempted in my humble way to put them one by one before the Committee at one of its meetings in January last. The first proposal that I made was that the Committee should recommend to Government to abolish the post of Resident First Class Magistrate of Bandra and thus reduce the expenditure on one of the major heads by Rs. 400 to Rs. 500 a month. In support of my proposal I pointed out to the Committee that the number of first class cases tried by the Bandra Resident Magistrate ranged approximately between 30 to 40 annually and that there were already two other First Class Magistrates who could do all the work. I also suggested that as the bulk of the work consisted of 2nd and 3rd class cases, a bench of honorary magistrates if created or an officer of a lower grade with second class powers could easily cope with it. The Chairman of the Finance Committee, the Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL, ruled my proposition out on the ground that it was not within the competence of the Committee to consider such proposals. I thought the Honourable the Chairman was making a mistake in ruling my proposition out and he would soon correct himself if I brought another similar proposal. I, therefore, proposed that by way of war economy Government should ask the five Collectors in the presidency who enjoyed the privilege of having personal assistants to get on without them and thus secure a handsome saving. To my surprise I was at once told by the Chairman that my proposal was out of order on the ground on which my first proposal was disposed of. I could not then dare to put other proposals of a similar kind and take similar rulings, as I thought my colleagues would think I was worrying some of them unnecessarily as I am now worrying you. I then proceeded to lay before the Committee some other proposals which I had formulated on Budget Notes for the Government of Bombay, a copy of which is usually supplied to the members of the Finance Committee only 2 or 3 days before the last meeting of the Committee. It will astonish Your Excellency to learn that the Honourable the Chairman ruled that I had better confine myself to the draft financial statement and not to go into the details contained in the Budget Notes which he added were supplied to the members for their information only.

My Lord, with due deference to the opinion of the Honourable the Chairman of that Committee, I submit that the rulings are entirely wrong. I do not know whether the majority of this Council will support me in my view of these rulings, but if they do, it follows as a matter of course that the Finance Committee was prevented from considering various legitimate and important proposals and making their recommendations on them to Government. If that be so, the revised financial statement which the Honourable the Finance Member desires to present today must go back to the Finance Committee for reconsideration and report to Government after considering my humble suggestions. I invite the attention of this Council in the first place to rule 4 of the Financial Rules at page 206 of the Council Manual. Under this rule the Chairman of the Committee has a second or casting vote in the case of the equality of votes on any matter. Neither this rule nor any other rule that I know of empowers the Chairman as such to rule any proposal out without taking votes of the members present on the question whether the proposal should be allowed for discussion or not. I submit therefore that the Chairman having acted without authority in ruling my proposals out, his rulings are entirely irregular. Apart from this and assuming that the Chairman has under the rules the power to rule out a proposal falling outside the scope of the Committee's functions, I maintain that the rulings were wrong inasmuch as the proposals in respect of which they were given were proposals which the Committee is not only empowered but is bound to consider. May I invite the attention of this Council to sub-rule (2) of rule 6 of the Financial Rules which makes it obligatory on the Committee to consider the estimates of revenue and expenditure referred to in clauses (b) and (c) of sub-rule (2) of rule 5 and recommend such amendments in them as seem to it to be advisable? Now, clause (c) of sub-rule (2) of rule 5 says as follows :—

"The draft shall comprise tabular statements showing the estimated provincial expenditure, under specific major heads, on existing establishments and schemes and on new schemes the cost of which is not considerable or which the local Government considers to be of an absolutely obligatory character."

The Council will thus see that it is not only the right but it is the duty of the Finance Committee to consider the expenditure on existing establishments and schemes and make recommendations in regard to them. That being so, it was perfectly competent for the Finance Committee to consider the proposals I was making.

My Lord, I have brought forward this proposal simply with a view to vindicate the rights of the non-official members of the Finance Committee. After all said and done, what is the amount of control that we non-official members possess over the financial proposals of the Government of Bombay? A non-official member could be elected to the Finance Committee. There he may bring proposals and if the Finance Committee by a majority agree and the majority is the Government majority—then it goes in the form of a recommendation to the Executive Government which is not at all bound to accept that recommendation. Then again, a non-official member—an official member also—may bring in a financial resolution before the Legislative Council. If that resolution is carried—though under the present constitution of the Council there is hardly any chance—the Executive Government is not bound to carry it out. The sole and entire control over the finances is thus vested in Government. We non-official members have merely the privilege of bringing forward proposals and moving resolutions, and even if this small privilege is thus encroached upon, then no wonder the Morley-Minto Reform Scheme is regarded as a failure. I have read the despatches of both Lord Morley and Lord Minto on which these Financial Rules are based and I can confidently assert to this Council that the liberal spirit pervading throughout these documents is certainly lacking in practice. I take leave of this Council to refer to some passages in those despatches bearing on the question. I shall first read an extract from Lord Minto's despatch to Lord Morley, dated 1st October 1908 :—

"We are clearly of opinion that it is advisable that the Council should be afforded increased facilities for expressing their views upon the Budget and that these facilities should be given at a sufficiently early stage to enable the Government to take advantage of any advice that may be tendered and to adopt and give effect to such suggestions as may be practicable. The ultimate control must, however, rest with the Government and no useful purpose would be served by affecting to ignore this essential fact. It is the Government and not the Council that decide any question arising on the Budget and the utmost concession that can be made is to give the Council ample opportunities of making recommendations to the Government in respect of particular items. But without departing from this principle we think that the Council may properly be empowered to record its opinion by vote on the greater part of the Budget proposals. The Indian public have long desired an opportunity of this kind and we think that the time has come when it may properly be given in the manner and to the extent which we shall presently explain in our letter to Local Governments. We did not put forward any plan by which members of Legislative Councils would vote on the Budget but we are anxious to meet the public demand, and we trust that our proposals in the matter both in regard to the Imperial and to the Provincial Councils may obtain Your Lordship's approval.

"In regulating the new system of discussion whether in the Imperial or Provincial Councils one of the first points for consideration is the range of subjects on which resolutions and voting will be permitted. Since we propose taking our stand on the practice of the House of Commons, and to lay down that no recommendation will be binding upon the Government, the limits within which the resolutions may be proposed can be very materially enlarged without running any risk of causing an embarrassment or misunderstanding."

To that Lord Morley in paragraph 32 says :—

"As in the case of the Imperial Budget, so with respect to Provincial finances, I observe with satisfaction that provision is made for full and free discussion and for the consideration by Government of the results of such discussion before the final proposals for the year are framed; and I believe that under the system suggested by you the Local Governments will retain that ultimate control over the financial policy of their provinces without which not only the authority of the Government of India but also that of the Secretary of State in Council and of Parliament will inevitably disappear."

My Lord, the rules are perfectly clear. The despatches on which they are based are a guide to their correct interpretation. But in this case the question of interpretation of the rules does not at all arise. In fact, the rulings are entirely outside the scope of the rules that I have quoted, and if this Council agrees with me, it is perfectly clear that the draft Budget has not been properly considered by the Finance Committee and therefore the revised Budget framed, as it is, must go back to it. It may be argued that any number of resolutions may be moved in this Council. The reply is that they could be very easily disposed of in the Finance Committee. There is absolutely no reason why the time of this Council should be taken up in that way. That is one of the reasons why the Finance Committee is constituted.

Before I close I have to make one more observation. Honourable Members will pardon me if they are told by the Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL that I am not quite exact in the statement of my proposals to the Finance Committee or of the rulings of the Chairman of the Committee. I wish I could read to you verbatim the notes taken by our Secretary in regard to those proposals and rulings. After the meetings of the Finance Committee were over I wrote to the Secretary of this Council for copies. A few days afterwards I got a reply, not from Mr. Nissim, the Secretary to the Legislative Council, to whom I had addressed my letter, but from Mr. French, to say that it is not the practice to give copies of the minutes of the meetings of the Finance Committee to outsiders. The meetings of the Finance Committee are private and therefore no copies can be given. I submit that a member of the Finance Committee—I myself was a member of the Finance Committee—when he applies to the Secretary for a copy of the proceedings, he is entitled to get the copies of the notes. I say that it amounts to nothing more than distrust on the part of Government towards non-official members in this regard. However, I ask Your Excellency's Government and the members of this Council to consider whether the rulings of the Chairman of the Finance Committee prevent a due consideration of the financial statement. With these few words I put my proposition before Honourable Members in full confidence that they will accept it.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I should like before going any further to know what exactly is the motion the Honourable Member proposes to move.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency,—My motion is that the business of the presentation of the Revised Financial Statement for 1917-18 be adjourned under rule 7.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Then I should like to draw the Honourable Member's attention to rule No. 10 of the Financial Rules which lays down that the Revised Financial Statement shall be presented to the Council on a day not later than the 13th day of March.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I am aware of it, but the trouble is not of my creation and I think the presentation of the Revised Financial Statement can be adjourned and a meeting of the Finance Committee called again.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Is the Honourable Member of opinion that we can over-rule the rules?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I say that the Honourable the Finance Member has ignored the rules and, therefore, there is no other course for me but to move an adjournment.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The first proposition is entirely a matter of opinion. But as President of the Council I am entirely disinclined to ignore the standing rules. If the Honourable Member wants to move an adjournment I must ask him to move another resolution.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Do I understand that Your Excellency suspends rule 7 of the rules under which I am entitled to bring this motion? Under rule 7 I am entitled to move this proposition but Your Excellency has got power to suspend the rules. Rule 45 says that the President may, for sufficient reasons, suspend any of the foregoing rules, and if Your Excellency wishes to suspend this rule, of course, I have nothing to say.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—But the Honourable Member must remember that in this discussion we must go by the Financial Rules, and under rule 37 of the Financial Rules, the President may, for sufficient reasons, suspend any of the foregoing rules. I must tell the Honourable Member that I think he has raised entirely a new proposition in the Legislative Council which is peculiarly interesting. I think it would, perhaps, be interesting to Honourable Members if they were to hear the reply of my Honourable Colleague to the Honourable Member, and then I will consider the suggestion which my Honourable friend has made.

The Honourable Mr. G. CARMICHAEL:—May it please Your Excellency,—I am quite prepared to admit that the Honourable Mr. PATEL has stated his case very fairly but I think he has omitted to remember one particular condition of the Finance Committee and that is it is an informal body and the discussions in it are informal. Rule 6 says that the first business of the Finance Committee is to consider the provision made under the head "unallotted expenditure." In Bombay we have taken pride in the fact that we have gone beyond this particular rule in the discussions of the Finance Committee and made modifications in our proposals in accordance with the recommendations of the Finance Committee not only with regard to unallotted expenditure but with regard also to what is put down as obligatory. Our meeting this year considered the whole of the new proposals which were very extensive, because this year we were in the fortunate position of having rather more money than we could dispose of and at the end of that discussion when all the items had been discussed and the details settled, the Honourable Mr. PATEL, as he has told us, brought forward certain propositions and intimated that he wished to discuss certain items which have been in the budget for several years past. Personal assistants to the Collectors, for instance, have been provided for in the budget for years past and also Resident Magistrates. Now, it did not seem to me to be fair on the Finance Committee to impose on it the task of the discussion of the whole of the expenditure of the Bombay presidency. The Honourable Mr. PATEL has told us that it was open to him to bring specific resolutions in regard to any item in the budget, and for these reasons in the exercise of what I thought was the power given to the Chairman of the Finance Committee under the rules I disallowed the discussion of the proposals he brought forward.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I think in regard to the particular motion that the Honourable Member has moved I must lay down this ruling that he will observe, as Honourable Members will all observe, that there are particular rules for particular discussions in this Council. There are particular rules with regard to discussions of financial propositions and particular rules with regard to discussions of resolutions; the discussions of financial matters must be governed by the financial rules and the discussions of resolutions by the Resolution rules. The general rules for the conduct of business must be for the guidance of Honourable Members generally and of the President in particular. So I must ask the Honourable Member that, if he wishes to bring forward a motion now on this particular matter, he must move it under some clause in the financial rules.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I bow to Your Excellency's ruling, but I find that under the financial rules I cannot bring forward any such motion.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I quite see the Honourable Member's difficulty, but we are under certain orders with regard to the sending up of our Financial Statement and we must abide by the financial rules in regard to that matter.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Am I to take it that it is Your Excellency's ruling that I cannot bring this motion?

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Yes, that is my ruling.

The Honourable Mr. RAGHUNATH PURSHOTTAM PARANJPYE:—Your Excellency,—Will it not be possible to get the Honourable Member in charge of the Finance Committee to move his Financial Statement first and then allow the Honourable Mr. PATEL to move that further discussion of the Financial Statement may be postponed?

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The same difficulty will arise then also. We have to get through our Revised Financial Statement on a particular day according to the rules, and if we are going to postpone the discussion of that we will get into difficulties as Honourable Members will see.

The Honourable Mr. BHURGRI:—Is it the ruling, Sir, that the rules for the conduct of Council business do not apply when the Financial Statement is under consideration?

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—My general position is this, that when we are discussing Finance, the Financial Rules are to be observed and they do take precedence over the general rules for the conduct of Council business, for the purpose of discussion of Finance.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL.

The Honourable Mr. G. CARMICHAEL:—May it please Your Excellency,—I have the honour of presenting to this Council the Revised Financial Statement for the year 1917-18. Copies of the Statement were supplied to Honourable Members last week but the figures therein shown require amendment in accordance with the amending memorandum issued yesterday, the 12th of March, copies of which and of the Financial Statement have been placed on the table.

The budget has been prepared on the assumption that the war will continue throughout the year and for the third year in succession expenditure has to be restricted in the interests of Imperial finance. We have to adjust our expenditure so as to leave with our bankers, the Government of India, as large a balance as possible in order that they may more readily finance the heavy demands upon them arising out of the war. When last year's budget was under preparation drastic retrenchments had to be made to bring the proposed expenditure within the limits of the expected revenue. This year the financial conditions are considerably easier. A most welcome expansion of revenue, coupled with the effect of the economy which we have been practising in the past two years and more, has removed the excessive stringency of which my Honourable colleagues complained so bitterly last year. It is therefore proposed to take advantage of the improvement in our financial position by making good again past retrenchments where these seem likely to have a deleterious effect on the progress of the presidency and by making some provision for the further development of our resources. Financial help is needed too for the scheme for the advance in local self-government and the opportunity has been taken to provide for some long delayed improvement in pay in some of the lower ranks in Government service. It has been found possible to propose new expenditure in these directions and at the same time to keep well within the estimated revenue. A surplus is not usually a satisfactory or legitimate feature in a Provincial budget, but the case is, I submit, entirely different when it is the result of restrictions on expenditure imposed on us in the interests of imperial finance.

The Finance Committee, as I have just said, in reference to the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S motion, had this year greater scope for their labours than they had last year, and I take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of the great assistance they rendered in weighing the various proposals for new expenditure and in settling the details of the Draft Financial Statement. I must also thank the Honourable the Chief Secretary and the staff working under him for the invaluable help they rendered.

Taking first the revised estimates for the current year, it will be seen that when the actuals for 1915-16 became available the estimated balance of Rs. 1,43,65,000 to be carried over from that year into the current year was converted into an actual opening balance of Rs. 1,77,01,000—an improvement of Rs. 33,36,000. The revenue budget of the current year was for a revenue of Rs. 7,51,60,000. On the basis of actual receipts up to date it is now estimated that the revenue will reach the figure of Rs. 8,01,25,000. The important variations are a decrease of $5\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs under Land Revenue and large increases under Stamps ($6\frac{3}{4}$ lakhs), Excise (32 lakhs), Income-tax (Rs. 13,85,000) and Forest ($5\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs). Under Land Revenue the receipts were affected by larger recoveries in the closing months of last year, leaving less than was anticipated for recovery in the current year. It has further been necessary to provide for some suspension of revenue owing to the damage done by the excessive rain in parts of the Southern Maratha Country. A Press Note giving an account of this misfortune has just been published at the instance of the Honourable member representing the Local Boards of the Southern Division. The head "Stamps" was one of those directly affected by the war and the improvement under the minor head "Sale of General Stamps" indicates a return to at least the normal amount of business. The "Excise" head also suffered when war broke out, and a cautious estimate seemed necessary last year, but the increased rate of taxation and the good season have more than made good the set-back. Under Forests a good demand and greater activity in exploitation of timber have been responsible for the improvement. Out of the increases, 40,000 under Excise and 8 lakhs under Income Tax are to be transferred to Imperial as being due on account of the new taxation brought into force in March 1916. These adjustments are made under Transfers between Imperial and Provincial, in which ledger there is another entry which may be mentioned, namely, the sum of Rs. 1,25,000 which is refunded to Provincial, being one half of the expenditure in connection with purchases of fodder for famine in 1915-16 which were made in anticipation, happily unrealized, of a fodder famine in Gujarat. The Government of India have undertaken to bear half the total expenditure incurred on this account.

On the expenditure side of the budget the total budgeted for in the current year was Rs. 7,54,10,000. It is now anticipated that not more than Rs. 7,36,05,000 will be spent before the end of the current year. This saving is due mainly to an under-estimate of the savings likely to accrue on account of the salaries of civil officers who have gone on military duty and also to the fact that the Police force, owing to difficulties of recruitment, is considerably under sanctioned strength.

Thus instead of closing the current year with a deficit of 2½ lakhs, it is expected that the revenue will exceed the expenditure by Rs. 65,20,000. Adding this to the opening balance of the year, the estimated closing balance on 31st March 1917 is Rs. 2,42,21,000.

The revenue budget estimates for 1917-18 follow fairly closely the revised estimates for 1916-17. The estimate is for a revenue of Rs. 8,05,34,000 allowing for two Imperial assignments totalling 4 lakhs altogether—a recurring assignment of 2½ lakhs for improving the pay and for the training of teachers and a non-recurring assignment of 1½ lakhs out of the profits of the Government of India's wheat purchase scheme. This latter assignment is earmarked for expenditure for the improvement of agriculture. On the other hand Imperial revenues take through the Transfer head another 1½ lakhs on account of receipts from the graduated Income Tax which was introduced in March last. The total amount which they propose to take under this head is thus raised from Rs. 18,40,000 of the budget estimates for 1916-17 to Rs. 26,40,000 in the revised estimates and to Rs. 27,90,000 for next year.

On the other side of the account we budget for an expenditure of Rs. 7,88,24,000 an increase of 52 lakhs over the amount which it is calculated will be spent in 1916-17. This leaves a surplus of revenue over expenditure amounting to Rs. 17,10,000 and brings our closing balance to Rs. 2,59,31,000. We are very fortunate that in the midst of the great struggle which is going on we have so far had good seasons. The war has not affected the prosperity which good harvests bring to our trade and industries. It has on the contrary stimulated effort both on the part of private enterprise and of Government to develop our resources. This, together with the economy which the war has enforced, will place us in a favourable position when we have to face a series of lean years such as we know from the past are likely to come upon us.

I now proceed with the detailed consideration of the budget heads relating to the departments of which I am in charge. These heads will be taken in the order given under section 3 of the Revised Financial Statement, page 25. Under "Refunds" and "Assignments and Compensations" there is nothing to add to the information given in paragraphs 23 and 24 of the Revised Financial Statement. Under "Land Revenue" we budget as usual on the assumption of a normal monsoon and the figure adopted is practically the same as was adopted for the budget of the current year. The revision settlements which came into force from the beginning of the current year will have a fuller effect next year. I may also notice the effect of the breaking up of considerable areas of waste land for cotton cultivation which is taking place in Gujarat. On the other hand, as will be seen from the table in paragraph 10 of the Revised Financial Statement the outstanding balance from previous years is no longer at a high figure even allowing for the suspensions granted on account of damage by floods in the Southern Maratha Country. On the expenditure side, we take account of a saving of Rs. 2,78,000 due to the large number of officers who have gone on military duty and provision is made for a larger expenditure on the construction and repair of village chávdis. This particular item was cut down very drastically last year and this year we are able to make fortunately provision for this very necessary purpose. We also provide money for the long deferred scheme of improving the pay of village accountants in the Kanara, Kolaba, Ratnagiri and Darwar districts in order to make their position equal to that of the village accountants in the other districts of the presidency.

Under Stamps I have nothing to add to the note in paragraph 26 of the Revised Financial Statement.

Under Excise the decrease in the receipts which occurred after the outbreak of the war and the seemingly slow rate of recovery in 1915-16 necessarily induced a cautious estimate for the revenue in 1916-17. The budget for that year was put somewhat below the revised for 1915-16 but the revenue of 1915-16 was better than the revised by over 7 lakhs and the revised for 1916-17 is now 32 lakhs more than was estimated in the budget. Out of the increase, Rs. 40,000, realised from increased taxation imposed last year on Indian beers excised at tariff rates, is passed on to Imperial through the transfer head. The Excise administration report for 1915-16 shows that the increased revenue in that year was obtained on a markedly lower consumption of country spirit and that the policy of encouraging the sale of weaker at the expense of the stronger spirit had met with considerable success. Further measures will be taken in the same direction from the beginning of 1917-18. I may mention one fact, namely, that leaving out of account the number of liquor shops in Bombay city, of the remainder in the presidency proper one-fourth are now selling nothing but the weaker spirit.

On the expenditure side provision is made for the scheme which has been worked out for the amalgamation of the Salt and Excise departments, proposals for which have been submitted to the Government of India and we are awaiting final orders in the matter. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI has intimated by letter that he does not think there is immediate necessity for the amalgamation scheme or for the creation of three new Deputy Commissioners. I may take this opportunity to reply to him. The point about the scheme is that the cost, after amalgamation, will not be greater than the total present cost of the two departments, one of which is paid for by Imperial and the other by Provincial. In the adjustment of the combined cost, for facility of division, a proportion is taken which gives some advantage to Imperial. This is not unfair when it is remembered that the amalgamation is designed to improve the morale of the Excise Department which at the present moment, there is reason to believe, is not so good as it should be. I am confident that the scheme will greatly improve the Department and bring it to the same level of efficiency as has been attained by the Salt Department.

Under Assessed Taxes I again may take the Honourable Mr. UPASANI'S letter as a text. He points out that the Income Tax for 1917-18 is taken at 66 lakhs as against Rs. 33,46,000 the actuals for 1913-14, and he fears that the increase of 100 per cent. is excessive in view of the dislocation of trade and commerce during the last three years owing to the war. As the amending memorandum shows the budget for next year has now been raised to Rs. 67,50,000. It is not in our province to impose this additional taxation. Additional taxation has been imposed for the benefit of the Imperial Government. Even if the taxation had been assessed at the old rates there is no doubt that there would have been an increase. Out of the Rs. 67,50,000 which is entered in the budget for next year Rs. 27,90,000 is due to the new taxation on the graduated scale introduced in March last. The balance Rs. 39,60,000 may be taken as the figure which would have been reached if the old rates had remained in force. This is Rs. 6,14,000 in advance of the accounts for 1913-14 the year which the Honourable Mr. UPASANI takes as his starting point, and as Income Tax is a divided head to get the total increased taxation under the old rates we have to double the amount, arriving at the figure Rs. 12,28,000 which will represent the increase and as we know this increase is assessed on incomes actually received it follows that there has been a considerable improvement in the trade and commerce in our presidency in spite of the war.

On the expenditure side under Assessed Taxes we provide a very small increase compared to the very large increase in revenue—a small increase that has been found necessary to deal with the greater volume of business transacted in the Income Tax Collector's office.

Under Forests the revised estimates show a substantial increase in receipts over the budget for the current year and it is expected that the increase will be maintained next year. Increased provision is proposed for additional staff and new works required for the development of the valuable forest properties which we possess. His Excellency visited Kanara during the year and stimulated the attention which is being directed to the measures required for improving the means of extracting timber, transporting it and putting it on the market. One of the best of our young engineers in the Public Works Department is at present in Kanara doing the work of a forest engineer. The Inspector General of Forests has just completed a tour of the forests in the Presidency proper, and we shall shortly have the advantage of seeing his report. I am confident it will prove to be full of useful and stimulating suggestions which will assist us in laying down a broad policy for future development. Again, in order to assist the Army, Department, who have to provide very large quantities of timber for the army, in obtaining from the Bombay forests as much of their timber requirements as these forests can supply we have lately lent that department the services of one of our Forest officers.

Under Registration I have no remarks to add to those that appear in paragraph 30.

Under Interest the noticeable feature is the steadily decreasing balance in the Provincial loan account due to the smaller demands we are making on Imperial for money to lend to cultivators and to local bodies.

Under General Administration, save for one item, the changes are merely matters of accounting. The new item is the provision for the deputation of an officer to work out detailed proposals for the revision of the Municipal and Local Board Acts which is required in view of the advance being made in the sphere of local self-government.

The Honourable Mr. MAHADEV BHASKAR CHAUBAL :—Your Excellency,—I now rise to deal with the next head of the budget, which is Law and Justice and Courts of Law. Honourable Members will find the main features of this head for 1917-18 dealt with in paragraph 34 of the Revised Financial Statement at page 30 and on page 9 of the introductory remarks of that Statement in paragraphs (e) and (f).

On the Revenue side it is dealt with under head XVI-A. The only feature worth noting on this side is that the anticipated revenue is better for the next year than the budget provision for the current year by Rs. 50,000. This increase is anticipated mainly under the sub-head "Magisterial Fines," as explained in paragraph (a).

On the expenditure side it is dealt with under head 19-A. Here you will see that the budget provision for the next year (1917-18) is more than that for the current year (1916-17) by Rs. 18,000. That for the current year was Rs. 57,55,000 while for the next year Rs. 57,73,000 has been provided for the estimated expenditure. This increase of Rs. 18,000 is due partly to some new provisions and partly to slightly larger provisions on account of some of the older and usual items of expenditure.

Two of the items which have caused this increase perhaps deserve mention. The first relates to the improvement in the remuneration of Public Prosecutors and their assistants in Criminal cases. Members of this Council are probably aware that at present the ordinary scale of remuneration to these officers is only Rs. 10 a day, in the Bombay Presidency excluding the Karachi District of Sind, where the scale of fees for the Public Prosecutor and his assistants was raised to Rs. 50 and Rs. 25 per diem in the year 1914. I may mention here that the scale of fees paid to these officers for criminal work varies in different provinces of India from Rs. 16 to 50 a day, so that you will realise that it is nowhere so low as in Bombay where it is only, Rs. 10 a day. This remuneration of Rs. 10 a day is given to persons who are generally senior practitioners in the district and bears no comparison whatever with the fees which their brethren at the Bar even junior to them who are engaged on behalf of the defence charge. Another feature which necessitates this provision is that on account of the feeling that this payment is too low Government have very frequent applications for sanctioning enhanced fees. Directly there is any case of importance conducted by any Public Prosecutor, an application is sent up to Government, with the support of the Sessions Judge, and District Magistrate, proposing payment of enhanced fees to the Public Prosecutor. Personally I would not say that even the proposed increase is liberal or even adequate, but it would go some way to relieve a standing grievance of these officers, that, if we make this provision for giving with this increase, Government at any rate will be in a position to scrutinise these applications for enhanced fees much more rigidly and we expect a corresponding diminution in the amount of remuneration which Government has to provide for on account of special enhanced fees to these officers. That is one of the items for which it has been considered desirable to make a provision of Rs. 20,000 in the next year's budget.

The other item is the provision of Rs. 8,088 for Personal Assistant Subordinate Judges. I might mention for the information of my honourable friend Mr. Upasani, who I find has alluded to this item in the letter which he has written to my honourable colleague Mr. CARMICHAEL, that this is not a scheme which is yet complete and finally sanctioned. It is a scheme yet under consideration between Government and the High Court, and the provision has been made on the assumption that the scheme if passed after consultation with the High Court, would probably have to be worked out at least partially during the next year. Though it is under consideration between the High Court and the Government, I have no objection to explain to this Council in short the main features of that scheme. You are aware that there used to be only one Inspecting Subordinate Judge for the four Deccan districts in which the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act was originally in force. Subsequently when the Act was extended to the whole presidency, three more Inspecting Subordinate Judges had to be appointed to cope with the work of the whole Presidency, and each of these Inspecting Subordinate Judges was placed in charge of four or more districts. Such of you as are conversant with the history of that piece of legislation, the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, are probably aware that later on on account of the abolition of conciliators and village registrars and other changes in that Act, the main work which these officers used to do ceased, and the High Court under its powers utilised their services for other work of inspection and supervision over subordinate courts. One of their principal duties then became the supervision over and the inspection of the management of minors' estates. I cannot give this Council detailed figures, but when I looked into the matter I found that in addition to the minors' estates which are under the orders of a Court under the care and management of private persons Nazirs and Deputy Nazirs were frequently put in charge of these estates by Courts of Law. The number of such estates no doubt varies in different districts. In some districts they come to something like 200 or 300. Roughly I found that one Inspecting Subordinate Judge, taking only the estates which were under the management of Deputy Nazirs, had to deal with something like 1,000 estates between the four districts in his charge and you can readily understand what a difficult, practically impossible, task it must be for one man to inspect, supervise, and look into the management carried on by a private manager or a Deputy Nazir in regard to so many estates. Government therefore concluded that these Inspecting Subordinate Judges could not efficiently cope with all the work involved, though no doubt these gentlemen were doing valuable work particularly in connection with minors and their estates which are in every civilized country the object of special solicitude and care on the part of the state and its Courts of Law. Again in every Judicial District there is an officer who is in charge of the District Judge's office establishment who is called the Sheristedar, or in some places the Clerk of the Court. In the staff of the District and Sessions Judge he is an important officer and is entrusted with important duties, but he is an officer who is generally selected, from the ranks and rises from a low position in the subordinate staff. It was thought that if these Sheristedars' places were abolished and also those of the Inspecting Subordinate Judges' particularly the latter with their travelling allowances, and that of their establishments and a Personal Assistant Subordinate Judge was given to each District Judge in his Judicial District it might be possible to get the work which the present officers carry on done much more efficiently and carefully than at present. It is therefore proposed to abolish these two sets of officers and substitute in their place fifteen Personal Assistants, one for each District. They would all be Subordinate Judges of the 2nd class but in different grades with an allowance in consideration of their having to live at a Sadar Station instead of a Taluka town. The advantage of the arrangement will be that the District Judge, who always complains of want of time for the administrative work of his district, will have a responsible officer of 5 or 6 years' experience to whom he can look for the performance of the more important duties now discharged by the Sheristedar and Inspecting Subordinate Judge. If you have one man who is in charge of one district, he can, I think, look more efficiently into the management of the minors' estates in that district and he can also be of use to the District Judge in taking charge of the more important work which the Clerk of the Court of the Sheristedar does now, and in order that there should not be a burden upon the rest of the staff provision is attempted to be made for slightly adding to the subordinate staff. One more clerk will probably have to be added. The cost of the present officers to Government which will be saved goes substantially towards meeting the cost of the new scheme.

That is the outline of the scheme which is under contemplation and which is under consideration between Government and the High Court. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI, I find, in his letter written to my Honourable Colleague proposes that this should not be done at once and should be tried as an experiment in some districts. Well, my answer is that, the scheme if sanctioned will in all probability have to be worked out gradually, if vested interests have to be safeguarded.

Well, these are the two main provisions which, as I said, are new.

Then with regard to the slightly larger provisions, for old items to which I have referred, these are, firstly, of Rs. 26,000 for the salaries of District Judges and Assistant Judges owing to more senior officers of the Indian Civil Service being on Judicial duty, and, secondly, of Rs. 10,000 for the entertainment of temporary Subordinate Judges and their establishments.

The increase in the expenditure budget for the next year is partially counterbalanced, in the first place, by the debit to the Major Head " 18-General Administration " of a 3/10 share (about Rs. 30,000) of the total cost of the combined office of the Secretary to Government in the Legal Department and the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, since this is done in other Indian Provinces and is considered to be a proper way of debiting these charges; and, secondly, by a lump deduction of Rs. 20,000 for probable savings in the salaries of District and Assistant Judges; and, thirdly, by a smaller provision of Rs. 8,000 being made for payments to officers of other provinces.

These are the main features of the budget estimates for the ensuing year. The estimates have been framed on the assumption of the continuance of the war throughout the year; and owing to the financial stringency strict economy has had to be observed and all expenditure which can be postponed without grave inconvenience has been postponed till after the conclusion of the war. I need not detain the Council long on this Major Head, as, with the exception of the items I have already mentioned, no provisions of any importance have been made. A few other items have no doubt been entered, but they are of minor importance and I need not trouble the Council with the recital thereof here beyond mentioning the fact that even in their case the only standard followed in providing them is their immediate necessity. The current year's provisions have generally been repeated with slight increases, where necessary, either on the basis of actuals or because the increases were of pressing urgency.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—May it please your Excellency,—The next head of accounts is Law and Justice—Jails 19-B. On the revenue budget it is to be noted that the decrease occurs chiefly under "Hire of Convicts" due to the withdrawal of prisoners for enlistment in the Prisoners' Labour Corps at Busra.

On the expenditure side there is slight increase. The main causes are due to the great rise in prices of certain articles of diet and constant increase in the cost of raw materials required by certain jails for manufacturing purposes; also to certain other special grants. Among these the following are of interest:—

The provision of Rs. 2,596 for increase in the allowances of the Assistant and Sub-Assistant Surgeons attached to prisons and convicts' gangs. These officers have to work longer and harder and their allowances are smaller than in any other form of service in which they are usually engaged.

The provision of Rs. 1,296 for the grant of local allowances at the rate of Rs. 2 each per month to 54 warders of the Thána Special Prison. These allowances are intended to compensate the men for the high prices of the necessaries of life in Thána.

The third item of special interest is the grant of Rs. 9,000 to the Juvenile Jail at Dhárwár. The fourth is the grant-in-aid of Rs. 8,000 to the American Maráthi Mission in connection with the proposed transfer to it of the management of the criminal tribes' settlement at Sholápur. The Council will remember that these criminal tribes for a long time have been under the management and control of Mr. STARTE with great success. This proposed transfer is the result of a settlement arrived at by Mr. STARTE. It is hoped that if the non-official agency in this instance proves a success it may be possible to hand over other similar settlements to similar agencies.

The increase on the expenditure side is partly counterbalanced by the absence of the current year's non-recurring grant to the Salvation Army in connection with the Industrial Home for Released Prisoners in the Bombay City. In this connection it will be convenient to deal with an item of special interest under 32, Miscellaneous. Under this head a provision of Rs. 24,600 has been made as a grant to the Salvation Army in aid of the construction of a new building for the European Workhouse for Males, Bombay. The present Workhouse being housed in an insanitary building, it is to be replaced by a new Workhouse which is to be built by the Salvation Army, the expenditure for running the institution being borne by Government as hitherto.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: REDUCTION FOR C. I. D. AND SECRET SERVICE.

[Mr. G. S. Curtis; Mr. Munmohandas Ramji.] [13TH APRIL 1917.]

The next head of account is No. 20-Police. The figures of total expenditure under this head of account in the current and ensuing years' budgets are—

	Rs.
1917-18	1,12,49,000

The increase in the expenditure budget as compared with the current year's budget is thus 2,40,000. The items which have contributed to this increase will be found enumerated at page 32 of the revised financial statement. Of those the grant of the local and hutting allowances is urgently necessary in view of the numerous vacancies and the difficulty of recruiting. Larger provisions are also considered necessary for clothing charges, petty construction, contingent charges and rewards to policemen in the interests of police efficiency. The provisions for the revision of the Prince's and Victoria Dock Police and rent of sites leased for buildings for that police amount to Rs. 40,000. The Prince's and Victoria Dock Police Scheme which has been sanctioned by the Secretary of State for India is estimated to cost Rs. 1,10,600 a year. A portion of it, involving an expenditure of Rs. 56,561 a year, has been already introduced. A provision of Rs. 20,000 is made in the budget for a further instalment of the scheme. One-half of the expenditure is recoverable from the Port Trust.

A further item of interest is the establishment of the Criminal Settlement of Berads at Khanapur which has been sanctioned with the view of reclaiming this criminal tribe. It has been located at Khanapur because it is conveniently situated with regard to certain forests, the extraction of fuel from which will afford ample employment. The measure is expected to bring in a revenue which will more than cover the expense incurred on it.

An increased provision of Rs. 11,400 is made for the staff of the Bombay Criminal Investigation Department which has been necessitated by the enormous volume of extra work due to the war.

Lastly, it is proposed to grant free diet to sick policemen entitled to hospital leave. The excess expenditure entitled by the above measures has been partially counterbalanced by the omission of provisions for the Police Training School and further police reorganization and reduction in the strength of the Criminal Investigation Department of the Bombay Presidency, and smaller provision for mounted police.

Under sub-heads Ports and Pilotage—21, I have no remarks to make.

The Honourable Mr. MUNMOHANDAS RAMJI:—Your Excellency,—I beg to move an amendment to the Financial Statement:—

"That the totals of expenditure for the Police Department be reduced by Rs. 33,200, the reduction to be effected by deleting item No. 85 in the statement B relating to the temporary increase in the staff of the Criminal Investigation Department of the Bombay City Police and providing for a non-recurring grant of Rs. 11,400 and by deleting also the item of secret service money providing for Rs. 21,800."

The ever increasing expenditure of the Government, specially expenditure for what may be called the spending Departments, has called forth on not a few occasions in the past strong protest from non-official members of the Council. The concern of these representatives of the public is particularly great as this expenditure proves a retarding factor in the way of the progress of education and sanitation. The Police Department is one of these Departments which are favoured with big increases and in this Department itself the section of the Criminal Investigation Department claims an ever growing expenditure. From the *statistical tables which I have annexed to my speech it will be seen that the expenditure for the Criminal Investigation Department was Rs. 69,923 in 1909-10 from which it rose upto Rs. 3,44,000 in the Budget estimates of 1915-16 and to Rs. 3,50,000 in 1916-17, the increase being almost 500 per cent. The percentage of this increase is the largest of all the different Provinces, a fact on which we cannot congratulate ourselves. I cannot understand why with the heavy annual expenditure allotted to it we should have a proposal for an incresse of Rs. 11,400, though temporary. Cannot two or three Inspectors be released from the large staff for the temporary war work for which increase is wanted! As to the work which is being done by this Department, remarks will be found in a paragraph dealing with it in the Administration Report of the Presidency of Bombay, for 1915-16 which runs thus:—"This Department, which included a temporary staff for dealing with Pathans, dealt with 85 criminal cases during the year, besides scrutinising plays, seizing proscribed books and pamphlets and rendering assistance to the Mofussil Police and the Police of other Presidencies." This works out at Rs. 4,046 per one Criminal inquiry. The specific amount of work for all these sundry things is not mentioned from which, it can be inferred that it must not have been of an abnormal nature. It amounts to this then that for the investigation of 85 criminal cases this costly expenditure of Rs. 3,44,000 is maintained. I hope I have sufficiently shown the justifiability of the first part of my amendment.

* Vide Appendix.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: REDUCTION FOR C. I. D. AND SECRET SERVICE.

Coming to the second part of my amendment about the secret service money the allotment for this too has increased from Rs. 10,539 in 1911-12 to 21,800 in the estimates of 1915-16 and 1916-17 though here Bombay does not top the list, this place being taken by Bengal. I need not, I think, refer to the fact that this secret service money acts often as an inducement to the unscrupulous to trump up false charges against some people and bring them into trouble. No other section of the Police Department like the Railway Police, the District Police, etc., needs this secret service money for carrying on its investigations. I cannot understand why the Criminal Investigation Department only should require it and that too to such a large amount. I hope that on the grounds I have shown my amendment will be accepted by this Council

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH:—May it please your Excellency,—I beg to support the resolution that has been moved by my Honourable friend Mr. MUNMOHANDAS I will state briefly the grounds upon which I support this resolution. I have not the slightest doubt in saying that the Criminal Investigation Department is a very useful department. There are circumstances under which the trained help of people of that department is absolutely necessary, thus for instance the case like the Bhamta case where there was a network of conspiracy all over the country. For the detection of offences of that kind and bringing criminal gangs of offenders to justice I should think a department of that kind is absolutely necessary. Numbers of cases may be mentioned which would show the necessity for a department of police of this description. But like all departments, one has to see that it is not over-manned or over-officered, and if it is over-officered and over-manned, the result would be that these people will create work for themselves for the purpose of justifying their existence. There have been many instances which show that this department is really over-manned and over-officered, and therefore the members of this department apply themselves to work which I should think is altogether unnecessary. We had before us the example of my late friend the Honourable Mr. GOKHALE. He had to say in the Imperial Council that he himself had been shadowed. The fact had to be admitted and the excuse, which I do not think any man will accept as a right excuse, in reference to Mr. GOKHALE was that it was more for the purpose of his protection than for the purpose of shadowing him. Further there have been cases like the case of the Honourable Mr. WACHA and the case of my friend the late Honourable Mr. KHARE who were shadowed from time to time, and the humble person who now addresses this Council has not been below their attention (laughter). I should consider that they have so little to do that it becomes necessary for them to go after people whose honesty, whose loyalty and whose love for the country could hardly be doubted. I think there is one great additional harm which the excess of men and the excess of officers in this department is likely to cause. It will create bad feelings between Government and the public men of the country. It will create in the minds of the officers of Government a suspicion about the public men which they would not be able to answer and will leave a bad impression on Government about them. I think that the engagement of an excessively large number of employés in the Criminal Investigation Department is highly injurious to the public interest and I think the over-officering and over-manning of that department ought to be stopped as much as possible.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—May it please your Excellency,—I call the attention of the Council to the resolution which runs as follows:—That the totals of expenditure for the Police Department be reduced by Rs. 33,200, the reduction to be effected by deleting item no. 85 in the statement B, relating to the temporary increase in the staff of the Criminal Investigation Department of the Bombay City Police and providing for a non-recurring grant of Rs. 11,400, and by deleting also the item of secret service money providing for Rs. 21,800.

Now, Sir, in a matter of this sort it is always difficult to speak in defence of the grant, and the difficulty is increased in this particular case, because, whereas the Resolution purports to continue the grant for the whole Presidency, the detailed reductions proposed are entirely those in the grant for Bombay City.

With the permission of this Council, I will deal first with the provision for Bombay City. The provision of Rs. 11,400 which is proposed for the Criminal Investigation Department of the Bombay City only, is, I should like to inform this Council, entirely necessitated by the large increase of work involved by the war. It would probably be realised by Hon'ble Members of this Council that there is an immense amount of work which has devolved upon the police in consequence of the despatch from Bombay of three big expeditions, one to the Persian Gulf and Mesopotamia, and the other two to East Africa and Arabia. It is consequently necessary to keep a very close watch on foreigners of all nationalities, European and others who are in Bombay, lest untoward accidents might occur which might affect the safe despatch of troops to the head-quarters of war operations. I think, Sir, I need not say more as Hon'ble Members will realise at once the immense amount of harm that evil disposed persons might cause if the vigilance of the police was relaxed, having regard to the number of steamers which leave the Bombay harbour almost every day for different theatres of war.

The Commissioner of Police has so far asked for this small sum of Rs. 11,400 for expenditure. I think, Sir, that this Council will agree with me that this demand is extremely moderate and had it not been for the high level of efficiency at which the force is maintained and the great devotion with which they work, it would probably be necessary to raise this amount five-fold. Remembering that Bombay is the second city of the Empire and the head-quarter port for the embarkation of troops, I doubt whether there is any other city in the world where, with the vastness of the war at present in progress, such a small addition to the expenditure on the police would be complained of.

We have seen, Sir, from our telegrams and from what we have read in London newspapers, what has been happening in England. Well, Sir, so far, we have been spared anything similar here in Bombay, and I hope we may long be so spared. But, Sir, it is necessary having regard to the existence of the war and the fact, as I said, that Bombay is the head-quarters for large warlike operations, that the police should be continually strengthened, and for this purpose separate establishment will have to be granted.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: REDUCTION FOR C. I. D. AND SECRET SERVICE.

[Mr. G. S. Curtis; Mr. Munmohandas Ramji.] [13TH MARCH 1917.]

Now, Sir, as regards the grant for the Criminal Investigation Department for the Presidency in general, the Honourable Member (the Honourable Mr. MUNMOHANDAS RAMJI) has not been quite fair in the figures which he has quoted in the statement which he has placed before the Council. He has mentioned that the estimate for 1916-17 is 3½ lakhs. As a matter of fact if he will turn to the revised estimate, he will see on page 52 of the Revised Financial Statement that the revised estimate for 1916-17 amounts to 3 lakhs, 22 thousand only. This, I think, shows—what is a fact—that very great care has been taken to keep down as far as possible, the expenditure incurred on this department and to see that it is not over-manned or over-officered. I was very pleased to see the Honourable Mr. PAREKH getting up and paying a tribute to the usefulness of the Criminal Investigation Department. But he mentioned only the Bhamta cases. I was somewhat surprised that he had no knowledge of the very interesting and good work which was effected during the past few years in his native city. The Honourable Member is not probably unaware of the Umreth forgery cases which, after five years of investigation and careful inquiry by the Criminal Investigation Department, have now been brought to a successful issue, and in the case of the last one of which the experienced Judge of Ahmedabad has specially commended the skill and industry with which the investigation had been carried out. In that case at any rate, the Criminal Investigation Department have accomplished work of very great usefulness to Umreth in particular and to society in general.

As regards the secret service money, to which the resolution refers, it will be seen that the grant is Rs. 12,000 for the Presidency proper and Rs. 9,000 for the Bombay City. Once more I trust the Council will agree with me that in the City of Bombay a grant of Rs. 9,000, i.e., £600, for secret service money, when a great war is in progress, is extremely moderate. I think it may be necessary to increase it later in the year. But, Sir, for the present it is a matter of the greatest congratulation, a fact which, I think, we as members of this Council and citizens of Bombay have every reason to be proud that the police in Bombay have managed to get through this year with £600 for secret service money.

As regards the cost and efficiency of the department in the Presidency in general, it is rather difficult for me to meet insinuations of the Honourable Member with regard to the shadowing of various persons. I was not aware till this moment that the Criminal Investigation Department were devoting any of their attention to his movements, and I will certainly arrange that in future he shall not be shadowed. His Excellency the Governor is also, I believe, watched carefully when he moves about, and if Honourable Members find that they are also subject to the attention of the police, they must remember that after all they are in distinguished company. But, Sir, in general I venture to dispute the proposition that the scale of our Criminal Investigation Department is at all out of proportion to the size of the Presidency or the importance of the work that is entrusted to them. As 'civilization' develops it is necessary that the police department should be furnished with detective staff who are fully equipped by training and by skill to deal with cases such as the Bhamta and the Umreth forgery cases and others occurring from time to time.

I submit, therefore, that the grant at present allowed to the Criminal Investigation Department in this Presidency, the revised estimate for which is only Rs. 3,22,000, the actuals for 1915-1916 being Rs. 3,36,000, is extremely moderate, and I move, Sir, that this resolution be rejected.

The Honourable Mr. MUNMOHANDAS RAMJI:—Your Excellency,—In reply I have to say that I do not object to the grant of this expenditure to this department. I appreciate the work but my suggestion is simply this, that it is only intended for the maintenance of two new officers during war time, and if the police had a mind they could have spared two officers from other departments and saved this amount of Rs. 11,400 which is proposed as a non-recurring grant.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: REWARDS TO POLICEMEN.

[13TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Munmohandas Ramji; Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani]

My object in bringing before this Council this resolution was that, knowing as I do that the Education Department and other useful Departments suffer owing to want of adequate grants on account of the curtailment of expenditure during the course of war, I thought that this Department might make its own arrangement to cope with the additional work and save this sum of Rs. 11,400. The reason for suggesting the other item the deletion of which I have advocated is this, that this money is not well spent and the Department is going on increasing every year, and therefore, with a view to check the Department I brought this resolution. After hearing the explanation given by the Honourable Member in charge of Police I beg to withdraw this resolution.

The resolution was by leave withdrawn.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—May it please your Excellency,—The resolution which I have the honour to move runs as follows:—

"This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor that the provision made under item No. 87* in statement B of the draft budget statement be omitted."

My Lord, this item No. 87, which forms the subject of my resolution, refers to a provision of Rs. 10,000 made for rewards to policemen. This amount is proposed in addition to a sum of Rs. 30,000 which is usually sanctioned for that purpose. The question is whether it is necessary to increase that amount. The reasons given are that the amount was fixed some years ago and is found insufficient to meet all the rewards recommended, and that it is necessary to increase that amount to meet the increase in the constabulary since sanctioned. My Lord, on reference to the last year's Police Administration Report we find that, out of the actual number of 1,056 officers and 23,863 men in the service, not less than 80 officers and 9,039 men were given rewards in that year. We further see that in the Southern Division the number of rewards during the year increased from 1,461 to 1,756 and in Sind from 1,652 to 1,742 and that, though there was a decrease in other Divisions, there was an increase of 62 in Ahmedabad District and that the percentage of officers and men rewarded to the actual force was 36·25 against 37 in 1914-15. These figures, my Lord, will show that even with the existing grant it is possible to provide for rewards for more than one-third of the actual strength of the force and this provision seems sufficiently reasonable. We have now to see whether the proposed additional grant is needed. This will depend upon a case being made out for recognizing the work of this constabulary in a more liberal manner than it is possible to do with the funds that have been sanctioned at present. Now as to the actual nature of the work of this force I beg leave to only refer to the observations recorded in the Government's own last Administration Report for 1915-16. This is what is said there. "The figures of punishments and rewards denote a distinct falling off in the discipline of the force both in the City (of Bombay) and in the mofussil. There was an appreciable increase in crime compared with the two previous years..... The most unsatisfactory features of the year, apart from the deterioration of the standard of discipline and conduct, were the fall in the percentage of the value of property recovered and the rise in the number of undetected cases." My Lord, in the face of this unsatisfactory work, is it desirable to increase the amount for rewards? My Lord, this unsatisfactory state of things is due to the manner in which the police re-organization scheme has been carried out so far. Complaints have been frequently made on this account not only by the outside public but even in this Council and the matter was the subject of a resolution moved by the Honourable Mr. KAMAT and again by the Honourable Mr PATEL in this connection. Looking to the large recurring and non-recurring expenditure to which Government is already committed on account of the police re-organization, I

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: REWARDS TO POLICEMEN.

[Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani; Mr. Curtis, The President.] [13TH MARCH 1917.]

submit it is high time to stop any further unnecessary expenditure under this head. The extent to which the police expenditure has increased will be seen, my Lord, from the fact that in 1907-08 the figure was Rs. 71,45,000 and last year it came to Rs. 1,02,81,000. This year that has been increased to Rs. 1,08,41,000, and in view of this large increase I particularly wish to draw Government's attention to the urgent need for close supervision and check over the ever increasing expenditure on this branch of the public service. Along with the item of Rs. 10,000 which forms the subject of my resolution, there is another item of Rs. 50,000.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—I rise to a point of order, Sir. The Honourable Member is moving a resolution tor a reduction in the amount allotted for the grant of rewards. He is not entitled to go outside the immediate item to which he refers. The Honourable Member is referring to another item altogether.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Member must speak to his resolution.

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI:—I refer to the other item as part of my argument, not with a view to move that as part of my resolution. I want to point out that as a result of the re-organization, which has been carried out, there has been a serious increase in the expenditure without any corresponding improvement in the service and that being the case to ask what good will the proposed increase in the grant for rewards bring about? The total strength of the service is over 20,000 and rewards are only to be given for meritorious services but they are already being given to more than 33 per cent. of the force and th effect of this has been that instead of improving the service it has probably impaired its efficiency. We have seen that the prospects held out to the constabulary are so poor that it is not possible easily to get the right sort of men for it There has been difficulty in recruiting. Few people now come forward and we do not get men of the required standard. Men who are unfit have to be taken on and it affects not only the disciplinebut also the health of the service. Out of the total force not less than 2,762 men were below standard requirements at the end of last year. The entertainment of so many recruits below the required standard has added to the sickness and other failings in the force. In not less than 10 districts you will find the percentage of attendance in hospitals gone up to over a hundred and even to 195. Even in the best of districts, Dhárwár and Sátára, where the climate is known to be reputably the best, the health of the men is not good. It is, therefore, a question whether we can go on with the same policy. We find from the last report that out of 19,702 men who formed the actual strength of the constabulary, 2,795 individuals were recruits enlisted during the year; 4,070 of less than 3 years' standing; 6,954 of 3 to 10 years' service, and only the rest 5,883 of above that standing. Then as against 2,795 recruited during the year so many as 1,818 resigned, 225 were dismissed, 500 otherwise discharged, 58 deserted, 229 died and only 445 retired on pension, leaving 901 vacancies to be filled up at the end of the year. These figures show that the enlistment that now goes on is not satisfactory and we ought not to spend more money on further recruitment of unfit persons or on additional rewards to the force especially when its work has been so unsatisfactory as to call for unfavourable comment from Government. The best way would be to stop further recruiting of unfit persons and to go on with the improvement of the village police on whom the initial responsibility of preventing and detecting crime rests so far as the mofussil is concerned. There we have a service.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—I rise to a point of order, Sir. The relative superiority of the village police and the district police is not a point for discussion under the resolution.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I would ask the Honourable Member really to adhere entirely to the subject of his resolution.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: REWARDS TO POLICEMEN.

[13TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani; Mr. Kashinath Ramchandra Godbole; Mr. Balkrishna Sitaram Kamat.]

The Honourable Mr UPASANI:—What I have been driving at is that, rather than spend sums which are not calculated to improve the service, save them and find a way to utilise them to improve the service, and that it is possible to do it if we begin with the village police. You will get in that force recruits of the right type of men at less cost than is incurred at present and we have no reason to doubt that all the proposed additional expenditure for rewards and recruiting would be saved. I do not want to take up more time, my Lord, but I say that if all these factors are taken into consideration it will be seen that the spending of this sum would not be in the best interests of the department or of the public and I think it would be much better to change the policy. Let us not go on with the present policy which I have endeavoured to show does not benefit the department or the public either.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE: Your Excellency,—I beg to give my support to the resolution which has been moved by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI. I hold, Sir, that in the case of all Government servants, the salaries that we give them are adequate for the performance of their duties and no public servant should expect any reward for doing his work well. It would be a wrong policy if Government were to give rewards to servants that do their work efficiently. I very much wish that the Honourable Mr. UPASANI'S resolution had gone further than it does. Instead of cutting down the proposed grant by Rs. 10,000, I wish he had put down in his resolution that the whole of the grant, which with the increment will amount to Rs. 40,000, should be struck out from the budget. It may be argued that in the case of low paid policemen who do their work properly, some special consideration should be shown. I think that the proper way of rewarding good work in such cases would be to give the men special promotions out of their turn. On the whole, considering that the police department has been recently re-organized and that the pays of constables, head constables and the whole constabulary have been lately revised, I think these rewards should be abolished altogether, on the principle that every public servant is supposed to do his work efficiently and satisfactorily for the salary that he gets.

With these remarks, Sir, I support the resolution that has been brought forward by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMAT:—Your Excellency,—I should like to supplement the remarks of my Honourable friend Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE by a few figures drawn from the latest administration report of the Police Department. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI has more or less anticipated me by quoting from the latest administration report certain remarks made by Government themselves with regard to the discipline of the police force, namely, the figures of punishments and rewards, in which there is a distinct falling off. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI told us only the percentage of rewards, as given in paragraph 36 of the Police Administration Report. Here the Inspector-General of Police points out that the percentage of officers and men rewarded to the actual force stood at 36·25 per cent., which means that in this force every third man, or nearly so, got a reward in the year, either by money grant or by promotion. Now I shall give the other side of the picture so far as the efficiency of the police is concerned in the detection of crime; I turn to the same police report. I find that in the Northern Division the proportion of undetected crimes to real cases is something like 35 per cent.; in the Central Division it is 38 per cent.; in the Southern Division it is 25 per cent., and taking the percentage for the whole Presidency, the percentage of undetected crime to real cases works out at 39·1 per cent. Now, if according to the opinion of the Inspector-General of Police, every third man in the force is deserving of a reward, I really fail to understand why such a large percentage of crime should go undetected. I shall now turn to the figures published in paragraph 35 of the same report. Taking Northern Division, Ahmedabad alone is responsible for 331 punishments in the force out of a total of 8,099. This shows, for instance, that Ahmedabad fairly heads the list. In the Central Division, Poona returns the largest number of punishments, namely 277. I do not mean to say that these figures are conclusive in showing that these rewards should not be given. I do not want to say that no rewards should be given to any one at all. As far as I can see the proportion of punishments dealt out by the department is very small, while the proportion of rewards is exceedingly liberal. Therefore I say that the increase of this provision for rewards to the police from Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 40,000 is entirely unjustifiable. If there are cases where Government think it necessary to reward the police for heroic work, I would rather stick to Rs. 30,000, a provision that seems to me to be ample. I am not prepared to go the whole length of my Honourable friend Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE when he says that no Government servant, especially in the police department, should get any rewards at all. There are occasions when a particular behaviour require some sort of encouragement, but the proportion of rewards should be kept down as low as possible, and if we judge by the figures dealt with, it seems to me that Government is over-liberal in making provision for rewards, especially money rewards to the police department.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—As I understand it, the supporters of this Resolution have urged two main principles. First of all, that no Government servant should, under any circumstances, get more than his monthly salary. Secondly, that where the number of punishments happens to be rather large the number of rewards should be correspondingly reduced. Now, as to the first proposition, which was enunciated by the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE, I am sure, Sir, this Council will not accept it. There are certain circumstances which require the exhibition of qualities, which can only be remunerated by money rewards. It must be remembered that under the re-organization scheme the scope of promotion and advancement for the lower ranks of the police department is exceedingly small. Under that scheme practically no armed policeman can get above the grade of a head constable. Consequently, if good and heroic work is done by the members of the armed force as well as members of the lower ranks of the unarmed force; monetary reward is the only form of encouragement which it is possible to give. It must be remembered, moreover, that a large section of the police are engaged on a quasi-military basis and that with regard to them pecuniary rewards are at the present moment and have always been recognized as extremely suitable. I do not know whether the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE will urge that the Commander and crew of a submarine, for instance, who go every day out to sea at the peril of their lives, cannot be rewarded suitably by money, or, for instance, that the members of a fighting force, who are habitually rewarded by money for bravery shown, are unsuitably treated. Anyhow, I would ask this Council to agree with me that monetary rewards are a very suitable form of reward where great physical courage is shown. In the next place, Sir, as regards the argument put forward by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI, his argument seems to be this. The force is in a very bad way, recruitment is falling off, the stamp of recruits who are forthcoming is not very satisfactory, the percentage of property recovered is bad, the discipline is not satisfactory, and the investigations done do not generally result in success. Now, Sir, what is the remedy that he proposes. Stop their pay? Stop their reward?. Well, Sir, that according to my experience is not a sound way of treating them. Most of us here who have been heads of large establishments will know probably by experience that the best way of stimulating good work and honesty in their subordinates, is to reward them. Mr. UPASANI'S way is apparently different. When a force by its dwindling numbers and deterioration in the standard of recruits shows that it is not attracting the right class of men, when moreover, the general fall in the value of money and general rise in the cost of living makes the rewards hitherto given inadequate, he recommends that the whole system of rewards should be stopped, or, at any rate, that the sum hitherto granted should be maintained at as low a figure as possible. The Inspector-General says that it is not possible. He contends that the best way, one very small way, of improving the efficiency of the force is to reward good work. Of course, it is a lamentable fact that a very considerable number of punishments have been inflicted but because 30 men out of a 100 have been punished it does not follow that 10 men should not be rewarded. On the contrary it seems to me to make for discipline and improvement in efficiency. If there be black sheep in the force they must be made to see that those who have done well are rewarded. The actual grant of Rs. 30,000 has been in the budget for the past 7 years. If I remember right, it was placed at the suggestion of the Inspector-General of Police. In the seven years the value of money has shrunk a good deal, and the number of the forces has gone up. Therefore, Sir, I think that this request of the Inspector-General for increase from Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 40,000 is not ill-timed. I would therefore ask the Council to reject the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—My Lord,—I am afraid my Honourable friend Mr. CURTIS has not quite realized the point of my argument. What I want to make clear is that this small sum of Rs. 10,000 for rewarding 20,000 people is not calculated to secure the interests of the men whom it is intended to encourage. The best way to acknowledge their merit is to give them far better reward than a few rupees here and there. Well, rather than give petty rewards of a few rupees in this way at the pleasure of certain officers, it would certainly be better to make a permanent provision to improve the service and give rewards to only those who really deserve them. That would be a step in the right direction. A large number of deserving individuals would benefit by it, and, therefore, I ask that instead of providing Rs. 10,000 for additional rewards and Rs. 50,000 for recruiting, it would be better to have this amount of Rs. 60,000 reserved or ear-marked for special promotion to those men who may prove themselves to be really deserving? We have not proposed that there should be no rewards. I have already pointed out that I do allow that the sum already sanctioned for them be retained and only urged that it be better utilised. It is not that we urge that there is no need for encouraging these people. The suggestion is to give encouragement in a more substantial way than is being done now. The proposed additional provision may therefore be reserved for improving the service, by providing for more substantial encouragement and in a more definite and effective manner than by mere petty rewards. With these remarks I commend the resolution to the Council.

The resolution was then put to the vote, 13 members voting for it and 30 against it. The Council divided as follows:—

The Honourable Mr. MAHADEV BHASKAR CHAUBAL :—Your Excellency,—The next head is Education. On the Revenue side the income expected during the year, as you will find on page 48 of the Revised Financial Statement, is Rs. 6,28,000, i. e., Rs. 19,000 better than the budget provision for the current year, which was Rs. 6,09,000. This increase is anticipated partly from the fees expected from the students joining the proposed Arts College at Dharwar and from those attending the Ranchhodlal Chhotalal Technical Institute at Ahmedabad now taken over by Government: partly due also to the enhancement of fees in the Gujarat College from Rs. 30 to Rs. 40 a term, and to the contributions from local bodies towards the cost of the Technical Institute at Ahmedabad.

On the expenditure side, in 1914-15 the budget provision for education was 103 lakhs, but only 83 lakhs were actually spent. Owing to the financial situation arising out of the war, the provision for 1915-16 was less than 77 lakhs and the expenditure amounted to Rs. 75,30,000. In the current year, 1916-17, the educational budget stands at Rs. 77,54,000. For next year it has been found possible to provide Rs. 85,89,000, i. e., an increase of Rs. 8,35,000 over the current year. It must be noted that the provision of Rs. 85,89,000 is exclusive of the items which you will find referred to in paragraph 39 of the Financial Statement, which taken together total up Rs. 8,47,000; so that the total Provincial expenditure on educational objects in 1917-18 is estimated at Rs. 94,36,000 Then, in addition, I might mention a couple of items which will increase the other side of the expenditure, because we have not thought it necessary to repeat the provision of Rs, 27,000 or Rs. 28,000 for the Deputy Director of Public Instruction, which has been omitted, and for a non-recurring grant to the Salvation Army for a boys' in lustrial home, which has been dropped again during the next year. The increase, as you will see, is chiefly due to the provisions made for the eleven items specified in paragraph 38, sub-paragraph (b), on page 33 of the Financial Statement. The details about these items, which I do not think I need repeat, Honourable Members will find in paragraph 13, sub-paragraphs (g), (h), (i), (j), (k) and (l). I think it would be better to refer shortly to the heads which refer to these different items and you will find those stated in short at page 6 of the introductory remarks. You will see there item No. (vii) Establishment of an Arts College at Dharwar; No. (viii) Grant-in-aid for primary school buildings in Bombay City; No. (ix) Grant of scholarships to Mahomedan students in secondary schools in the Presidency prop r; No. (x) Improvement of Mahomedan education in Sind; No. (xi) Opening of new primary schools, giving code-pay to trained teachers, and entertainment of additional teachers in undermanned primary schools; No (xii) Entertainment of an Inspectress of shools in the Southern Division; No. (xiii) Grant of special assistance to the Roman Catholic Mission on account of the withdrawal from the staff of their schools and colleges of teachers of German and Austrian nationality. Well, these are the major heads and I do not think I need detain you long except by making supplementary remarks on one or two items. With regard to the first, the proposed second grade Arts College at Dharwar, I may observe that Government promised to open it, assuming the sanction of the Government of India, by the beginning of June 1917, on condition that the full amount of Rs. 2,00,000 undertaken to be collected for that purpose by Rao Bahadur S. K. Rodda and Rao Bahadur R. C. Artal was paid into the Government Treasury before the end of March 1917. I am glad to state that Rao Bahadur Rodda has already redeemed his promise, but the other lakh undertaken to be collected by Rao Bahadur Artal from the Lingayats has not yet been received by Government, so I am not able to make any definite statement, but I have full confidence in the enthusiasm of Rao Bahadur Artal for higher education in the Karnatak generally and of his own important community in particular and feel sure that the promised amount would be forthcoming within the time mentined in the press note on the subject. In the meantime Government are taking steps to apply to the University for the affiliation of the College and to settle all preliminaries as the college has to be opened in June, and in any event this Council might take the establishment of the second grade Arts College at Dharwar, if the application for the affiliation is granted by the University, as accomplished.

Then the other item, namely, annual provision for building grants is Rs. 2,50,000 but owing to financial stringency this was reduced to Rs. 1,50,000 in 1915-16 and to Rs. 2,00,000 in the current year. In November 1915 Government issued a circular notifying to the public that for the present and until further notice no educational institution can be newly placed on the aided list, nor can any building or equipment grant be promised to an institution already on such list. The pending claims for grants for buildings commenced before the issue of the circular, however, aggregate Rs. 2,70,000 and for meeting these liabilities and other urgent and unforeseen claims Rs 3,00,000 have been provided in next year's budget for building grants.

In my speech on the budget last year I had remarked that pending the acquisition of a site and the construction of buildings temporary arrangement had been made for the separation of the Training College for Women, Poona, and the Practising School attached to it from the High School for Indian Girls, Poona. Government consider it desirable that a new home should be found for the institution. A sum of Rs. 30,000 has therefore been provided for the acquisition of the site and commencement of the building during the next year. The total cost of this project is to be debited to imperial grants.

Then before the war it was usual to provide from provincial revenues Rs. 2,00,000 for the improvement and extension of primary education. In pursuance of this policy the following figures have been entered in the educational budget for grants to local boards and municipalities :—

Additional grants to local boards for opening new primary schools, Rs. 4,66,000 ; additional grants to local and municipal boards for the improvement of the pay of primary school teachers, Rs. 9,41,500 ; totalling Rs. 14,07,500

As explained in paragraph 13 (j) of the Financial Statement, this policy has remained in abeyance for the last three years owing to the urgent necessity for curtailing expenditure, but a provision of Rs. 2,00,000 has been made for this purpose in the ensuing year's budget, having regard to the paramount claims of primary education on the resources of the State This brings up the total provision for the improvement and extension of primary education to Rs. 16,00,000. Out of Rs. 1,00,000 for opening new primary schools, 450 schools are usually opened in the Presidency proper and 50 in Sind

Among several schemes which I referred to in introducing the educational section of the budget last year as having been postponed on account of the war the appointment of an Inspectress of Girls' Schools for the Kanarese Districts was included In view of the importance which female education has recently assumed Government have decided to create the appointment and the requisite provision has been made on its account. Other important measures, such as the schemes for the medical inspection of school children, for the creation in the Provincial Educational Service of an inspectorate for Bombay City and adjoining districts, for the creation of two appointments of Inspectors for technical schools under the Committee of Direction for Technical Education, await the advent of better times. As pointed out in my speech on the budget last year, savings from the imperial recurring grants are being accumulated for constructing additional buildings for training colleges and secondary schools. The savings from those grants for the last year have not been earmarked for any specific purpose.

Another item which is referred to has reference to the appointment of Dr. C. J. Fox. The Secretary of State has sanctioned the proposal for the transfer of Dr. Fox and his appointment as Professor of Chemistry from the College of Engineering, Poona, to the Royal Institute of Science, Bombay ; for the revision of his emoluments when the transfer takes place ; and for the creation at the College of Engineering, Poona, of a post in the Provincial Educational Service on Rs. 600 rising by annual increments of Rs. 20 to Rs. 700 per mensem to provide for a Professor of Chemistry and Geology. As the buildings of the Royal Institute are being utilized at present for hospital purposes, the transfer of Dr. Fox and his appointment will remain in abeyance until the buildings are available for educational purposes. In the meantime it is proposed to select a man on probation for the professorship of chemistry and geology at the College of Engineering (to take the place of Dr. Fox as soon as the latter is transferred to the Royal Institute of Science) and to place him under the Geological Survey of India for at least two years to obtain practical experience in geology, being paid Rs. 350 per mensem during the first year and Rs. 400 per mensem during the second year. The requisite provision has been made on this account in the ensuing year's budget.

The existing arrangements in regard to the character and control of the Ranchhodlal Chhotalal Technical Institute, Ahmedabad, having been found unsatisfactory, Government have taken over its control with effect from the 1st January 1917. The expenditure on this account will be covered almost wholly by the existing Government grant, contributions from local bodies, interest on endowment funds, fees, etc.

Another item which I think the Honourable Mr. UPASANI will be specially pleased to note is that Government have been able in this year to give to the gymnasts the rise of pay for which at one time he so passionately and eloquently pleaded in this Council last year. This measure involves an extra expenditure of Rs. 4,290, rising ultimately to Rs. 12,960.

Then it is generally admitted that the training of teachers for primary and secondary schools is one of the most urgent educational reforms. The inadequacy of the existing arrangements for this purpose in the several provinces as well as the question of the provision of adequate pay for teachers has recently engaged the serious attention of the Government of India and it is very gratifying that they have been able, without awaiting the return of normal conditions, to make a recurring assignment of Rs. 2,50,000 per annum to this presidency from imperial revenues for the purpose of improving the pay and training of teachers in secondary and primary schools. As regards this subject, I might be permitted to mention, as there are some resolutions coming on on these points, that the proposers of those resolutions should note that the Government of India are very anxious that a regular programme for the next five years should be laid out providing at least for getting out the requisite number of trained teachers according to the number that will be required in each year, owing to men either dying or retiring or on account of the extension of primary education. They have asked us to find out exactly and compute how many men would be required to be trained each year—not for general purposes, because that is a very huge task, but at least for the purpose of supplying trained teachers and trained mistresses so far as those that are expected to retire or so far as primary education is extended to new places that will have to be created are concerned, and Government have at present been collecting, in consultation with the Director of Public Instruction, information on these points. Therefore the movers of the resolutions on this subject will know that the Government of India have, notwithstanding the present financial stringency, granted us Rs. 2,50,000 for the training of teachers in primary and secondary schools. In addition to that, as usual we have a provision of Rs. 2,00,000 from our provincial budget and how to utilise the whole amount shall have to be determined and settled after we receive the information and forecast which the Director of Public Instruction has been asked to submit to Government, and therefore at this stage if any resolutions which are brought forward in this Council for allocating or distributing any amount out of these 4 lakhs or 2 lakhs, any definite amount for any one purpose in preference to another, I do not think there is the material either before the Government or before the Honourable Members which can justify them in saying or recommending that out of these Rs. 2,50,000 so much should be given for this purpose and so much for another. We have not got the material at present and when it comes Government will have to consider the number of persons who are required to be trained. For instance, the Honourable Mr. UPASANI has given notice of a motion that all the trained teachers who are entertained this year should be given the full face value of their certificates. Now I think Mr. UPASANI will himself see that on account of the financial conditions the trained teachers whom we have entertained during the last two years have not got the face value of their certificates, and therefore if any amout is available to Government for the purpose of giving to trained teachers the face value of their certificates, on what grounds does Mr. UPASANI recommend that those persons who were taken last year or the year before that should not be given the full face value of their certificates and only those taken over this year should be given preference? I think the whole thing will have to be gone into in detail by the department. I think the concern of this Council should be to see that provision is made by Government, adequate provision so far as circumstances will permit, for the promotion of elementary education, and they ought to leave the distribution to the department and by the officers of the department who alone can be in a position to know which item required to be attended to first and which item could conveniently stand over for some time. It can only be after the information that I have referred to is received that Government will be in a position to settle the allocation and distribution of the provision made. I mention this as notice has been given of one or two resolutions on the subject and perhaps if the remarks that I make now are considered, the Honourable Members concerned will see that it would serve no useful purpose to take up the time of the Council over a discussion of these resolutions.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—May it please Your Excellency, the reslution which I wish to move runs as follows:—

This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the provision made under No. 92 (Entertainment of a Lecturer on Geography for the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics, Bombay) in statement B of the Draft Budget statement be omitted.

This item No. 92 refers to a sum of Rs. 4,200 provided for the entertainment of a lecturer on geography in the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics. When I propose to omit the item, I hope Honourable Members will not be led to think that I am making a proposal which will in any way interfere with the efficient working of the college. What I wish to point out is that it is possible to arrange for more efficient teaching of the subject of geography by the existing staff, and that there is no need for the additional lecturer for whom this grant is provided.

It will be remembered that this appointment of an additional lecturer was asked for and sanctioned last year for only one term between June and October 1916. It was then stated to be necessary for special reasons for only four months. Now the present proposal is to make this appointment a permanent one and on an increased salary of Rs. 350 per mensem. And why? The reason as given in the Revised Estimate is: "This appointment of a lecturer on geography on Rs. 300 per mensem was sanctioned for a period of four months only to cope with the additional teaching work between June and October 1916 when there were four batches of students working in the college simultaneously instead of the normal three. It is proposed that the appointment should be continued and that the incumbent of the post should be paid at the rate of Rs. 350 per mensem."

My Lord, when the appointment was sanctioned temporarily for four months, Mr. Kazi, who held that appointment, had to do only a few hours work, and I fail to see why some of the other professors should not be made to take up this work in addition to their own work.

I fully appreciate that this subject is not to be taught in the college in the way in which it is taught in the high-schools, and that higher and more scientific knowledge of the subject is required to be given in the College of Commerce and Economics. It is for that very reason that I desire that instruction in that subject should be given by those professors who have the advantage of possessing high qualification in that subject. There are on the staff of the College three or rather four Professors, namely, Mr. Anstey, Mr. Burnett Hurst, Mr. Shah and Mr. Tannan, who possess such qualification. Three of them are Bachelors of the London Economic Institute, and the fourth of the Birmingham Institute. The subject of geography formed part of the necessary subjects of the courses of study at those Institutes. These gentlemen, therefore, would be far better able to teach the subject than one who has not had the advantage of the special training received by them under specialists in British Institutions.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GEOGRAPHY IN SYDENHAM COLLEGE.

13TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani; Mr. Raghunath Purshotam Paranjpye.]

Then there is another point which I want to urge, and it is that these Professors have ample time to teach this subject. In other colleges Professors have to teach for at least 10 or 11 hours a week but the Principal of the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics has to teach for only 5 hours a week, Mr. Burnett Hurst, another Professor, for 4 hours a week, and the other Professors for 7 to 9 hours a week only. Now I do not see why these Professors to whom we pay large salaries should not spare 2 or 3 hours more to do this additional work of teaching Geography Last year we were called upon to sanction the pay for an additional hand in the Deccan College and that was not sanctioned although we knew that the Professors there had to do 15 hours' work a week. The Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE may be in a better position than myself to tell you how many hours a week the Professors in the Ferguson College have to lecture. But I am informed that the Professors in the Deccan College are at present working for 15 hours a week excluding some extra hours for the B.A. class.

Now in the College of Commerce we have two full-time Professors working for only four and five hours a week, and I do not know why we should not ask one of them to teach this subject in which they, I mean, Mr. Anstey and Mr. Burnett Hurst, have received instruction from specialists in England.

With these few words I beg to move the resolution and I have no doubt that Your Excellency's Government will see its way to accept it.

The Honourable Mr. RAGHUNATH PURUSHOTAM PARANJPYE:—Your Excellency,—I support the resolution moved by my Honourable friend Mr. UPASANI. So far as I can gather, this appointment of lecturer in Geography did not appear at any rate to some Members of the Finance Committee as quite necessary. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI has given the hours of work performed by the members of the College of Commerce. Now my friend the Director of Public Instruction will, perhaps, be able to tell us of the ordinary amount of work that is expected of the College Professors in a Government College. The Professors of the Sydenham College do not come at all near that level. The Principal works 5 hours a week, out of which 3 hours are taken up in teaching English Composition. Another teacher, who is a specialist in Statistics is engaged to a small extent only in the teaching that is imparted in the College. But we are told that the gentleman who is now proposed to be appointed for a permanent post is a specialist in Geography. I do not know what his special qualifications are, but he is only an M.A. of this University. At any rate there are several members on the staff of the College who ought to be able to teach Geography as well. Mr. Muzumdar did it and Mr. Tannan was teaching it. Both of them had been teaching it properly so far as I can gather. I am certain that by this new appointment we are increasing the establishment of the College of Commerce unnecessarily. It is a subject in which the present gentleman is a specialist no doubt but at any rate it is a subject which a person who has gone through the complete course of the London School of Economics is quite fit to teach. I therefore do not think that public money should be expended on a matter for which it is not at all necessary. The Professors of a College to do their full work ought to teach at least 12 hours a week. Even in other Government Colleges they all work for 12 hours. In private colleges like the Wilson College I know that they have even more than 12 hours'—generally about eighteen hours'—work to do. I do not see why we should be so very partial to the Professors of the College of Commerce and give them a handsome salary only for 5 or 6 hours' work. I think they are quite competent to undertake the teaching of Geography without this new addition and I therefore support this resolution.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I am glad my Honourable friend Mr. UPASANI has brought forward this resolution. I mooted this very question in the Finance Committee and requested the Chairman of the Finance Committee to get certain information from the Principal of the College of Commerce. Subsequently when I wrote to Government to allow me to see the correspondence that followed, Government told me that they regretted that they could not show me the correspondence that passed between the Chairman of the Finance Committee—of which I was a Member—and the Principal of the College of Commerce. The Honourable Mover, Mr. UPASANI, just now told us——

The Honourable Mr. GEORGE CARMICHAEL:—May I interrupt the Honourable Member? The correspondence had not passed between myself and the Principal of the College of Commerce, but the information was, at the request of the Honourable Mr. PATEL, obtained from the department in the control of my Honourable colleague Mr. CHAUBAL.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—In order to be quite accurate, I will read the very reply that I got from Government:

"From

J. NISSIM, Esq., I. C. S.,

Secretary to the Legislative Council;

"To

The Honourable Mr. V. J. PATEL.

"Sir,

With reference to paragraph 3 of your letter, dated the 11th February 1917, requesting that all correspondence between the Honourable the Chairman of the Finance Committee and the Principal of the Sydenham College of Commerce regarding the appointment of Mr Kazi may be shown to you, I am directed to state that Government regret that your request cannot be complied with."

However, all I can say is this, that if Government do not choose to show the correspondence relevant to a resolution before this Council to the Honourable Members of this Council, an inference adverse to Government should be drawn. There can be no question that there must be something wrong and it is therefore that Government is not willing to show that correspondence to members of the Finance Committee. I now proceed to place before the Council the information I have been able to gather in reference to this question. Mr. Kazi was brought on the staff of the college as a temporary measure for four months last year and the proposal now is that Mr. Kazi should be made permanent. At present, if I understand aright, there are three gentlemen who are on the permanent staff—Principal Anstey, Professor Burnett Hurst and Mr. Tannan. Now according to my information Principal Anstey works for 5 hours in a week, Professor Burnett Hurst 4 hours and Mr. Tannan 9 hours. Before Mr. Kazi joined it appears that Mr. Mazumdar used to take the subject of Geography which Mr. Kazi now takes. After the resignation of Mr. Mazumdar Mr. Kazi joined and took Geography for 3 hours a week. So his whole work consisted of 3 hours only and for that he was paid Rs. 300 per month. The point, my Lord, is this: We have brought a gentleman from Junagadh as a temporary measure for four months on Rs. 300 per month and we are now asked to confirm him on Rs. 350 permanently. It may be argued that Mr. Burnett Hurst, although he works only four hours in a week, has to attend to the library also. Well, I may point out to Your Excellency and to Members of this Council that we have in this very year's budget made a provision for a librarian on a pay of Rs. 75 or Rs. 100, I believe. Therefore that part of the work which Mr. Burnett Hurst does goes away. Then again it may be argued that Professor Burnett Hurst has to do research work. I do not know if he has to do that work, but if he has, why not all the other professors? I cannot understand why public money amounting to Rs. 11,000 a year should be spent in paying a professor who engages most of his time in research work. Every professor may say "I want to do research work, I want to know something new". Why should Professor Burnett Hurst alone be allowed this special facility and should be paid Rs. 900 per month for 4 hours' work a week? I respectfully submit to Your Excellency that if Principal Anstey, Mr. Burnett Hurst and Mr. Tannan who are really full-time servants of Government, take up the work which Mr. Kazi does now, there will not be the slightest difficulty. These are the three permanent men there according to the information that I have placed before this Council. Under these circumstances, I have no hesitation in supporting the resolution brought forward by my Honourable friend Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. ALFRED LAWRENCE COVERNTON:—Your Excellency,—It was with some surprise that I found yesterday from the agenda that a proposal of this sort was going to be placed before this Council. The College of Commerce is a new institution and it is an institution that has no parallel in India. It is a credit to this Presidency that a College of Commerce has been started here in advance of several other provinces. It is very necessary and advisable that such a college should be kept and maintained in a thorough state of efficiency as regards equipment and staff. The college was started, I believe, in response to a demand not from students merely or those directly interested in education, but also from the residents of Bombay connected with business circles, and if there is any city where a college of commerce is likely to be useful, it is the city of Bombay. The college is actually in close relations with business men and it is assisted in its management by an advisory committee which consists of a number of gentlemen who have large interests in business and commerce. These men on the Committee are concerned in maintaining the college with strict efficiency and in seeing that it is provided with all that it wants. The proposal for a lecturer on Geography has had the support not only of the Principal, but also of this Advisory Board. The Advisory Board consists, as I say, mostly of business men of Bombay and they have agreed with the Principal that the appointment for which this provision has been made in the budget is really necessary for the college. The Honourable Mover of this motion stated that, in moving the motion, he did not wish to be thought that he desired in any way to interfere with the efficiency of the college. I believe myself that the refusal of this provision would interfere with the efficiency of the college. The subject of Geography, as has been pointed out, is a very important one. It is true that you cannot have a curriculum in a college of commerce without including Geography. The teaching of Geography in the College of Commerce is not Geography as we learn it in schools, treating of rivers, mountains, etc. That is elementary geography. It is a subject of a highly scientific character and is taught for the purpose of teaching the relation of the physical features of the world to the social, economic, political and commercial facts of life. That is a subject which requires a close study and intimate acquaintance with statistics and details, and therefore demands one who has made a special study of the subject. As regards the importance of the subject, it cannot be denied that it ranks equally with, if not superior to, many of the other subjects in the syllabus of the College of Commerce. With regard to the work of the lecturers, the Honourable Mr. PATEL has said that various lecturers work only for 4 or 5 hours a week and he has protested against their receiving the salaries they do for the small amount of work that they do. Well, Sir, a great deal will depend upon what you mean by work. I have sat for two or three hours in this Council and I consider that in listening to the speeches I have been doing work. The work of the lecturers and professors of a college is not to be estimated by the number of lectures they give any more than that the work of a Member of the Legislative Council can be estimated by the number and duration of the speeches which he utters. The task of lecturers is not merely to lecture, but it is also to give instruction to students in the classes, to go through their exercises with them, to sit with them and give guidance to them in selecting their books; and pointing out passages in the books which require special attention and to correct exercises or essays or themes they may have done and a number of other comparatively small items of work which will not appear in any way in the time-table of any college. In addition to that, every college has a number of societies, the participation in the work of which is incumbent upon the members of the staff. There are the debating societies and other similar societies which involve for the lecturers a very considerable amount of work. They have not only to preside, but they have to take part and they have to guide the students taking part in those societies. All that, again, is work which does not appear in the time table of any college. I have been assured by Principal Anstey that the work of a lecturer at the College of Commerce could by no means be estimated by the number of hours that appeared on the time table. From my own experience of work in a college I can say that that is exactly what I myself should say.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GEOGRAPHY IN SYDENHAM COLLEGE.

[Mr. A. L. Covernton; the President.] [13TH MARCH 1917.]

There is a further consideration in this matter. Owing to the changes of terms of the University there was last year, and there will be this year also, an extra class in the college. The presence of that extra class, which implies a number of students, will involve a considerable addition to the labour of the institution. Last year that additional work was met by a temporary provision of an extra lecturer and by certain distribution of lecturers' work among the others, but the Principal assured me that the result of the arrangements that were made last year was not satisfactory, and that if this year they had to face giving instruction to this extra class it would be necessary seriously to consider whether they should not limit the number of admissions in June next. This is a point which was brought up at the last meeting of the Advisory Committee of the College of Commerce and it was discussed at some length, and the Advisory Committee came to the conclusion that, if an extra lecturer was not available it would be necessary not only to provide for extra work in various ways, such as distributing the work among the lecturers, but also to limit the number of admissions into the College for the coming term. Well, that, I think, would be a very regrettable thing for various reasons and if the deletion of this item from the budget is going to be insisted on, it would inevitably bring about this result which I think would be a very great pity indeed. As regards the particular incumbent who is to hold the post of lecturer on Geography, I do not think that is a point in question at all. The subject before the Council is whether the appointment is necessary, not who is to be the incumbent. The present holder of the appointment is thoroughly qualified for the work, but whoever the holder of the appointment, the Department is to, and will, see that he is well qualified.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I think perhaps Honourable Members would like to adjourn now till half past eleven to-morrow.

The Council then adjourned till 11-30 a. m. on Wednesday the 14th March 1917.

By order of His Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor,

J. NISSIM,
Secretary to the Legislative Council of

His Excellency the President:—Order, order. Further consideration of resolution by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI, 22, Education.

The Honourable Dewan Bahádur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE:—Your Excellency.—After hearing the debate that we had yesterday I am inclined to accord my support to the resolution that has been brought forward by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI. It seems that there are at present three full-time Professors in the College of Commerce and they are doing teaching work to the extent of 4, 5 and 7 hours a week only. It seems to me, Sir, that this amount of teaching work, even taking into consideration the other work that the Professors do for the college, is too small. The Professors of the Fergusson College, as we were told by the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE, work for about 15 hours a week, and I know that the Professors of Science of that college, including the laboratory work that they do, work for about 30 hours a week. And similarly the Professors of other Government and aided colleges, I think, work for not less that 12 hours a week.

The Honourable Mr. COVERNTON told us yesterday that in addition to the teaching work the Professors of the Sydenham College have to do other work, such as presiding over students' debates and looking after sports and so on. But I submit to the Council that Professors of the other colleges also do similar work. The Council has also to bear in mind that for keeping touch with the subjects which they are to teach in the colleges, all Government and aided College Professors have vacations of from 4 to 5 months in the year.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GEOGRAPHY IN SYDENHAM COLLEGE.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Dewán Bahádur Kashinath Ramchandra Godbole; Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas.]

I think, therefore, that the Honourable Mover of the resolution is quite justified in asking the Commerce College Professors to work 12 hours a week, the amount of teaching work that is done in other colleges.

The Professors in the Sydenham College will be setting a bad commercial example to their students if they do not give to the college full value for the payment that they receive. I, therefore, support the proposition that has been placed before us by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI, namely, that instead of appointing a separate Professor to teach the subject of Geography, his work should be divided amongst the existing professorial staff of the college and that the provision made for the Lecturer of Geography for the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics should be deleted from the Budget.

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS:—Your Excellency.—In rising to speak on this resolution I must say at the outset that I rise to do it with considerable diffidence. My diffidence is based, my Lord, on one thing, and that is that this proposition primarily concerns the question of educational progress of the Presidency. We find two experts in matters educational differing very widely. On the one hand, we have the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE, whom I am quite prepared to accept as an expert in matters educational as far as I am concerned, saying that the expenditure is unnecessary. The Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE'S career in this Council all along has been marked by advocacy of further expenditure on matters educational. If, therefore, the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE rises in this Council to speak against any expenditure incurred on behalf of matters educational, I personally would look at the matter with diffidence.

On the other hand, the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction told us yesterday why this educational expenditure is absolutely necessary. My diffidence is further increased by the fact that unfortunately I was not present in the Council when the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE and other Honourable Members spoke on this resolution. I propose, Sir, however, to look at this matter, not only from the point of view whether the professorial staff are working for enough number of hours as dealt with by the Honourable Dewán Bahádur GODBOLE, but from a wider view.

To begin with, I would like to mention to this Council the way in which the three items of extra expenditure were put before us in the Finance Committee. I am reading from excerpts of the minutes supplied to the Honourable Members of the Finance Committee:—"Item No. 66, Entertainment of a Lecturer on Geography on Rs. 350 per mensem for the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics, Bombay. By a majority of 7 to 5 we approve of this proposal."

"Item No. 82, Extra Lecturer on Rs. 300 per mensem for four months for the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics, Bombay. By the casting vote of the Chairman we have decided to recommend that the proposed expenditure may be omitted as the majority of us are of opinion that the ordinary staff of the college should be able to cope with the additional teaching work."

The Council will see that the Finance Committee did try to exercise economy in providing for the staff of the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics whenever it was justified by the information that had been put before the Finance Committee. I may also say that at the first meeting of the Finance Committee in December last even the consideration of this very item to which the present proposition before the Council relates, was put off for further information being collected and put before the Finance Committee, and when the Finance Committee passed the proposition that is now before the Council, they passed it after knowing fully the various counts on which this item was supported by Government.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GEOGRAPHY IN SYDENHAM COLLEGE.

[Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas; Mr. Phiroze C. Sethna.] [14TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. COVERNTON is reported to have said in this Council yesterday that this expenditure of Rs. 4,000 a year has been approved of by the Advisory Board of the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics. Now, if the Principal of the College has recommended this expenditure, and the Advisory Board consisting of officials as well as non-officials of the type of the Honourable Mr. WACHA, the Honourable Mr. WARDLAW MILNE and the Honourable Mr. MUNMOHANDAS RAMJI have approved of this and if, after that, Government, in spite of their anxiety to cut down expenditure in view of the present circumstances, have deemed it fit to put this item before the Finance Committee and if the Finance Committee have by a majority passed it, bearing in mind at the same time that in the Finance Committee another similar proposition was vetoed by the casting vote of the Honourable Member presiding there, I submit, Sir, that this Council will accept this item which has had the support of so many persons.

As I said at the outset, Sir, I am quite prepared to take the view of the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE in matters educational, but I hope that even the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE will not mind my saying that the College of Commerce in India is a new institution and that the course of the College of Commerce is not identical on all fours with the course in other Colleges of Arts. Of course, the lectures in Arts Colleges are mere routine work. Commerce and industry are expanding from day to day, and if Professors of the College of Commerce have to keep abreast of the times, I would submit, Sir, with some hesitation—I am aware of the fact that I am not an expert in educational matters myself—but I would still submit that it is not absurd to hold that the Professors lecturing in the College of Commerce should have more time at their disposal to keep in touch with what is going on from day to day in the commercial world.

There is one more aspect of the case that I would like to place before the Council. Unfortunately the commencement of the work of the College of Commerce has not been at an auspicious moment. I suppose the starting of the college coincided with the outbreak of war and Government have not been able to give as free grants as they should have liked to the College of Commerce. Then next came the very unfortunate discussion regarding the appointment of a Professor. On the top of it now we have had three items before the Finance Committee, one of which the Finance Committee have themselves disallowed and the other two were allowed by them to stand; and after that if we now go on and allow another item of expenditure to be dropped, I do not hesitate, Sir, to express my fear that we would be materially interfering with the efficiency of the College of Commerce. I attach very much importance to the approval of the Advisory Board to this item. I also draw attention of the Council to the very impartial way in which the Honourable Member presiding on the Finance Committee voted with the members who wished to disallow the item of Rs. 1,200 expenditure.

I submit, Sir, that the College of Commerce in this Presidency is an institution that is only getting on in course of time and I am quite prepared to admit that it is not an ideal institution, but so are none of the other institutions which have been existing for years together. But we do not wish in any way to handicap the progress of the College of Commerce, and I do wish that both Government and this Council will not interfere with this small item and will accept the same more or less unanimously.

The Honourable Mr. PHIROZE C. SETHNA:—Your Excellency.—I labour under the very same disadvantage as the Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS in not being present to hear the Mover of this resolution and the others who followed him. I also agree with the Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS that this question was amply threshed out in the Finance Committee and after having considered it from all points of view the majority in the Finance Committee came to the conclusion that this item should be passed.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GEOGRAPHY IN SYDENHAM COLLEGE.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Phiroze C. Sethna; Mr. Mahadev Bhaskar Chaubal.]

It has been contended, as I see from the report of the speeches appearing in this morning's papers, that much importance was attached to the fact that the Professors of the College of Commerce devote only five to seven hours a week to lectures on the different subjects they handle. But, Sir, the teaching in the College of Commerce, at any rate in its present early career, is conducted on different lines than is the case in Arts Colleges. Education in Arts Colleges is mainly imparted by means of lectures. Education in the College of Commerce, besides being imparted by means of lectures, also consists in home work which the Professors are required to carefully go through and which in its turn means their spending many more hours on such examination. Again, my Lord, there is another point, namely, that in addition to their college work these Professors are expected in the near future to attend to other duties for which they are not to be paid any extras. I believe that the Principal of the College of Commerce has announced on different occasions that it has been arranged for the Professors of the College to give lectures outside their college hours for the benefit of the commercial community at large. This will necessarily take up a good deal of their time. There is yet another point to which I would also like to draw the attention of this Council. It has been rightly held that the number of pupils to whom a Professor lectures must not be unduly large. I understand that this proportion is very greatly in favour of the Arts Colleges. In the Elphinstone College the ratio is one Professor to 14 pupils and in the Deccan College it is 1 to 15. The ratio in the College of Commerce was 1 to 27 in the last term and 1 to 33 in the previous term. Further, Your Excellency, what one has to bear in mind is the special qualification which is necessary for this particular appointment. What they ask for is a Professor in Geography. Now, it is not Geography as we understood it in our school days. Geography as taught today in the College of Commerce is the science of the physical and regional conditions of life and economic activity and it is a subject which, as it were, is quite new and requires special training and I understand that the individual who has been selected for this post is specially qualified to discharge the duties. In view of this I hope the Council will reject the motion of the Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. MAHADEV BHASKAR CHAUBAL:—Your Excellency.—The motion before the Council is that Item No. 92 in the Draft Financial Statement, which is a provision of Rs. 4,200 for entertainment of a Lecturer on Geography on Rs. 350 per mensem for the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics, Bombay, be deleted. Honourable Members have addressed the Council for and against the motion and the question appears to have been sufficiently threshed out: so I need not detain the Council long. But it appears to me that the discussion has been rather clouded by the introduction of irrelevant considerations. The sole question before the Council is whether in the Financial Statement for the year 1917-18 this provision for the entertainment of a Lecturer on Geography should be retained or not. I do not see much connection between this question and the question whether the existing staff of Professors and Lecturers work for a sufficient number of hours during the week. The latter question appears to me to be absolutely irrelevant on the point whether the retention of this item in the Financial Statement is necessary or not. Assuming for a moment that the staff of the College do not do enough work—there may be other appropriate ways of raising the question, or of remedying the evil if any exists, but there is no necessary connection between the provision of a lecturer in a particular subject in that college and the assumed evil of the staff taking an easy time of it and not working for as many hours as Professors in other colleges do. On the issue before the Council the only relevant question in my opinion is:—

1. Whether a Lecturership in Commercial Geography is necessary at the Bombay College of Commerce?

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GEOGRAPHY IN SYDENHAM COLLEGE.

[Mr. Mahadev Bhaskar Chaubal; Mr. V. J. Patel.] [14TH MARCH 1917.]

2. If it is necessary, whether provision for it requires to be made in the next year's Budget?

On the first point it is only enough to state that the University has prescribed that subject for the Intermediate Examination in Commerce, and for this reason it is absolutely necessary that lectures on that subject should be given to the students.

It follows therefore that if these lectures have to be given and if adequate instruction in the subject must be imparted to students, provision therefore must be made in the Budget.

It may no doubt be incidentally urged here that no provision need be made, as the subject can be taught by any of the present staff; and as it is contended that the present staff are not as fully occupied as they ought to be or rather as fully as Professors and Lecturers in other colleges are, it was not necessary to devote any portion of the provincial revenues on this item.

Now, let me clear the ground by frankly confessing that so far as I am personally concerned I am perfectly innocent of any acquaintance with the subject of Commercial Geography. At the same time I confess I am ignorant of any special claims to a knowledge of that subject that my Honourable friends Messrs. UPASANI, PARANJPYE and PATEL and the Honourable Dewán Bahádur GODBOLE may have. I only say this that there is a certain amount and a certain kind of geography which all the boys who are admitted into this college are presumed to know. But notwithstanding this the University has prescribed Commercial Geography as a subject for the University Examination. With my limitations of knowledge of the subject I confess I did attach importance to the report and opinion of the Principal of the College, supported as he was on the point by the Advisory Board, specially constituted to advise in the organization and administration of this college, the first of its kind in India.

When therefore the Principal of the College assured Government that Commercial Geography, as taught in the College of Commerce, is not the old-fashioned school geography, but the science of the physical and regional conditions of life and economic activity treated according to the methods introduced into English Universities by men like Mackinder, Geddes, Lyde and others, and that there was no one really capable of doing justice to that subject in the existing staff, that such arrangements as he had hitherto made for instruction in that subject were mere makeshifts until he could find the right man for the post, Government naturally attached the weight due to this opinion and it could not run away as this Council is asked to do by the Honourable Mover and his supporters with the supposition that the Director of Public Instruction, the Professors at the Commercial College and the Advisory Board had all formed a huge conspiracy to allowing the Professors and Lecturers at this College to enjoy holidays. Now you have been told, and I think it is important to note, that in the Finance Committee there were two days on which this subject was considered, and a special reference was made as to whether it was possible for any of the existing staff in the College to be able to teach this subject as it was one which was specially prescribed in the University curriculum for the Intermediate Examination of Commerce, and they were told that out of the present staff there was nobody who could teach the subject.

The Honourable Mr. V. J. PATEL:—I must say that we were not told so.

The Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL:—Well, I was not a member of the Finance Committee and was not present at its meeting, but at any rate this is the information on the point contained in a letter of the Principal of the College which I think I am entitled to place before the Council. The Principal reported that, so far as the present staff went, there was nobody who could teach the subject according to the required standard. For a certain number of months the Principal had asked Mr. Antia to take the students in Physical and Regional Geography and his reason for selecting him was mainly that he was less hard pressed with work than the other Lecturers, and all that the Principal asked Mr. Antia to do was to take a text-book and go through it with the students, explaining difficulties and adding comments as he went along. In other words, the arrangement was a makeshift. The Principal no doubt reports that when Mr. Mazumdar was there he lectured partly in this subject. I mention this point because the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE and the Honourable Mr. UPASANI have said that there are so many Professors and they are not working as many hours as they could and any one of them could be put on to teach this subject. Well, I do not think that ought to carry any weight with the Council, for this report shows that out of the present Professors and Lecturers there was nobody who could efficiently take up this subject. I think there was also an enquiry as to whether Professor Burnett Hurst was capable of teaching this subject or not, and the Principal reported that he was not able to do it. Therefore, the observations which were made here that any one of these seven or eight men on the College staff could be put on to teach this subject ought not, I think, to have any importance attached to them. The fact is that from December 1916 to now this subject has been taught in the College by Mr. Kazi. He has a lien on a permanent appointment at Rajkot. The Principal says that Mr. Kazi was agreeable to work on Rs. 300 while he was on probation, but that if he was to be continued permanently he declined to give up his Rajkot appointment unless he was given a salary of Rs. 350. The Principal reports that with all his enquiries he found that there was no other man whom he could possibly get. This is what he says on the subject:—"Mr. Mazumdar was able to undertake the work because he happened to have had the advantage of studying under Messrs. Mackinder and Sargent at the London School of Economics." He must therefore be regarded as having specialised in it. After Mr. Mazumdar had left, Mr. Anstey goes on to report that "There was, as the Director of Public Instruction knows, the greatest difficulty in finding anyone to replace him; and it was a lucky chance that we secured Mr. Kazi, whose map work for Messrs. Blackie & Sons was the best that was submitted to them in India." And he further says:—"Mr. Kazi's work here has since fully come up to my expectations: and he has certainly made good his claim to the permanent confirmation which, with the concurrence of the Director of Public Instruction, was promised him in the event of his services proving as valuable as was hoped."

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GEOGRAPHY IN SYDENHAM COLLEGE.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Mahadev Bhaskar Chaubal.]

Well, the Council has to choose between amateur impressions that it was only a subject like Geography and that any Professor or Lecturer at the College ought to be able to deal with it on the one hand and on the other the assurance of the expert who is responsible for the management of the whole institution, for its starting, organizing and development that Commercial Geography was a highly technical and scientific subject, absolutely necessary according to the curriculum prescribed by the University, and that there was no other man available to teach it as it should be taught and that the only man available had to be entertained for the reasons given. I think this Council will give adequate importance to the fact that this appointment has been approved by the Advisory Board—a consideration which was pointed out by the Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS—and to the further fact that it had the support of the late Director of Public Instruction. I heard the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE yesterday to say that any student who has studied at the London School of Economics ought to be able to teach Commercial Geography. I suppose he ought to know that in this institution different students specialise in different subjects. Mr. Mazumdar, who was a Lecturer in the College of Commerce a short time ago, may be said to have specialised in geography, having had the advantage of studying it under the great experts named above, and there was no person on the present staff who could do justice to the subject. If therefore this subject which has been prescribed in the University curriculum is to be taught satisfactorily, the entertainment of this Professor is absolutely necessary. I do not think that the majority in this Council will run away with the impression that Government and the Department are only keen upon throwing away the public revenues without any solicitude and care. I can assure them that the subject has been very carefully considered and it was only when the late Director of Public Instruction was satisfied that the entertainment, at one time only temporary and continued only for the current year, was necessary during the next financial year that Government entered this item in the Financial Statement. As a matter of fact, as has been pointed out, out of the several suggestions for omitting different items as regards the College of Commerce there was one which was negatived by the Finance Committee, and that item was omitted from the Financial Statement. As to the item now under discussion the majority agreed. Of course, there was a difference of opinion, but the differing members must have consisted of those who thought that commercial geography was not a subject of such great importance and that it could be taught by anybody on the staff of the college. With these remarks, I suppose Honourable Members ought not to find any difficulty in making up their minds as to whether to accept this motion or to reject it.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI :—May it please your Excellency,—I am sorry that several Honourable Members were not present in the Council yesterday while we addressed the Council on this subject and that we have to repeat some of the arguments which we advanced in support of my resolution. I yesterday made it very clear that in moving this resolution I had at heart only the interests of the college, that I desired that the teaching of such an important subject as regional and commercial geography should be given in this institution by those who had received special education in it. We have on the staff of the college four gentlemen who have received such education. We have been told that these gentlemen were not able to teach this subject of geography. I am surprised to hear this. This subject, my Lord, formed a necessary subject in the curriculum of the examinations which all these gentlemen have passed in English institutions. Mr. Anstey is a graduate of the London School of Economics. Mr. Burnett-Hurst is also a graduate of the same institution, as also Mr. Shah, while Mr. Tannan is a graduate of the Birmingham institute. Well, this subject of higher geography was not only a necessary part of their curriculum of studies but was studied by them under the expert professors named by the Honourable Member in charge of Education, such as Professor Geddes, Mackinder, and others who were specialists in that subject. Are we really to believe that these gentlemen who had thus studied this subject under these specialists were not able to teach it and are we at the same time to believe seriously that a gentleman who had not received any such special instruction in this subject in the local university of which he was a graduate, was better able to teach the same. My Lord, we should seriously consider the interests of the college and not certainly subordinate them to any individual personal considerations. What I say is that in the first place was it right that the Principal and the Second Professor who were the most highly paid officers in the college should have contented for themselves with only four and five hours' work in a week and while they had so little work for themselves should have asked for an additional hand to teach for three hours a week a subject which they were well qualified to teach and for teaching which they had ample leisure. In the next place was it proper that after the appointment was sanctioned to meet temporary inconvenience they should have selected for it a gentleman who had not the needful special qualifications to teach the subject which they themselves possessed. Next the wonder of it is that after having expressly stated that the additional hand was wanted temporarily for only four months they should have continued his appointment longer and now asked sanction for making it permanent; what would appear to be still more surprising is that while this additional hand, thus entertained temporarily for a term had no special qualification for teaching regional geography, he should have been made to teach in addition commercial geography and even Economic History of England, both important subjects, in which he had received no training whatever and which he was still less qualified to teach. These subjects used to be taught by Mr. Tannan and others who had studied them under specialists in England. You take away these subjects from professors who had specialised in them and give them to a gentleman who has not received any special training in them and want to keep him permanently to teach them and we are seriously told that this is in the best interests of the institution and are seriously asked to believe it. I hope, Honourable Members will not attach any importance to this sort of argument and will not accept it. Next we are told that this proposed appointment is recommended by the Advisory Board of the college. We have in this Council one Honourable Member who is also a member of the Advisory Board, I mean the Honourable Mr. MUNMOHANDAS RAMJI. If the Board had special reasons, he certainly would have been the last man to keep those reasons from the Council. We want the reasons. We know that big names did once carry weight even for directorates of banks, but with the exposures during recent years in connection with mismanagement of certain Banks the mystic charm of big names has gone and in educational matters such things should not be allowed. Members of the Finance Committee wanted to know the reasons which it was stated Principal Anstey had given for the proposed appointment but his letter was not shown them and the papers are not placed before the Council. It is in the interests of the students of the college, my Lord, that we should insist upon the more highly paid professors, who receive handsome salaries to do work in proportion to their salaries, and it would not be wise policy to let them work for only 4—5 hours a week and require temporary hands to work for 11 hours or more and the other half-time lecturers to work 7, 8 or 9 hours and to ask for additional permanent hands. The college itself is a half-time college. For a half-time college we have given seven professors and we pay them handsomely. Four of the permanent men, as already stated, are well qualified to teach this subject of higher geography and have ample leisure to teach it. That being the case would it be, I ask, in the best interests of the institution to engage an additional and less qualified hand to teach the subject and is this Council to sanction a proposal like that now before us on the mere assurance that the Principal thinks so and so? I say the Principal should not have asked for even the temporary appointment he did last year and he should certainly not have proposed it to be made permanent as he had now done. The Honourable the Director of Public Instruction was pleased to think that this appointment was absolutely necessary. Is it absolutely necessary under the above circumstances that we should provide the college with an additional teacher for geography and one who has not specialised in that subject and is it in the interest of the students to allow that teacher to teach also other subjects with which he is not particularly familiar? Honourable Members are aware that most Government Officers have to work ordinarily from 11 A.M. to 5 P.M. and even their Lordships the Judges of the High Court from half-past eleven to half-past five. That being the case it would, I submit, be no serious hardship for these professors who work only for four and five hours a week to work for 2—3 hours more weekly if the same be at all necessary. It is admitted that Mr. Mazumdar, who had passed the same examination as Principal Anstey and Mr. Burnett-Hurst was able to teach this subject very efficiently. If so, I do not know why these professors should not be able to do the same. I do not mind if you spend even Rs. 2,000 for any professor if absolutely necessary, but I do object and most strongly to any additional unnecessary expenditure on a new appointment when the existing staff is more than sufficient and has ample time to cope with the work and is far better qualified to do the work efficiently than the new hand proposed to be entertained. With these remarks I hope the Council will accept my resolution.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GEOGRAPHY IN SYDENHAM COLLEGE.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani; The President.]

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I only want to add one word to what has been said by various Honourable Members and my Honourable Colleague and the Director of Public Instruction who have opposed the resolution of my honourable friend. The sole argument of those who support the resolution, as clearly stated by my honourable friend Mr. UPASANI, is that the professors at the college are a lazy lot and do not do nearly enough work. Government is perfectly satisfied, and I should think most Honourable Members of this Council are perfectly satisfied, that the Professors at the College of Commerce are doing much work, doing extremely good work, are not sparing themselves in doing their work, and that they have got very little time for doing any other work. I can assure my honourable friend Mr. UPASANI and other Honourable Members that at this very moment lectures are proposed to be held in the college on the cotton industry. No extra staff is going to be asked for and they are going to take up this extra series of lectures, which will be of the greatest importance to the commerce of India, without any extra staff at all. I am inclined to think, with all possible respect, that this particular argument which has been advanced is rather a poor one. After listening to some of the speeches of those who support the resolution I can't help feeling that some Honourable Members have at the back of their minds a certain personal incident with regard to the professorial appointments in the college, and that this in the main is the reason that this resolution has been brought forward. What I want to urge on Honourable Members of this Council is that we have nothing whatever to do with that incident. Our purpose here is to provide such means as will ensure the thorough efficiency of the College of Commerce in every possible way. The Principal of the College tells us that Mr. Kazi is a specialist in geography and he considers that he is the only man available who can teach that subject on really up to date lines. That is the opinion of the Principal of the College, and from the Government's point of view we are inclined to accept that. This opinion is fortified by the strong recommendation of the Advisory Board, and by the approval of the majority of the Finance Committee. I say with all seriousness that those Honourable Members who are inclined to support this resolution will be taking on themselves a very serious responsibility by so doing.

[The President; Mr. Balkrishna Sitaram Kamat.] [14TH MARCH 1917.]

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution on "21 Education." The Honourable Mr. KAMAT.

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMAT:—Your Excellency,—The resolution which I have the honour to move is as follows:—

"This Council recommends that in the next year's Budget Estimates the provision for Building Grants for Education (Item No. 96 in statement B of new or Extraordinary Items of expenditure) be increased from Rs. 3,00,000 to Rs. 6,00,000, the additional amount of Rs. 3,00,000 being earmarked for free grants for Primary School Buildings in the Mofussil, and that this expenditure be met by a corresponding reduction in the provision of Rs. 4,00,000 made for Discretionary grants under head 45, Civil Works—Public Works Department, Item No. 217 of the said statement."

At the outset let me make myself clear that I propose that this additional amount of Rs. 3,00,000 should be for free grants and that this should be specially for primary school buildings and not for hostels and other buildings. Before I come to the main resolution, I should like to refer very briefly to the remarks which fell yesterday from the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL while he introduced the head of "Education". The Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL said that probably my resolution need not be moved at this stage as the Local Government was in correspondence with the Government of India on the subject of educational reform during the next 5 years and until such material was collected by the Honourable Member in charge of "Education" perhaps he would not be able to spend the amount as proposed by me. But in answer to that I submit, Sir, that my proposition simply at this stage is that in a year of improved finance like this we should take the opportunity of providing and earmarking this amount; we need not necessarily spend it if there is no such material or if a comprehensive programme is not ready, but there is no reason why we should not come to a decision so far as this grant is concerned when we have the funds available. Otherwise, what I apprehend might happen is this: that while we have got the funds this year we have not the material, and while perhaps by the time the material is ready we may not have the funds. I should therefore think that we should proceed to come to a decision—a decision which is simply whether we should allow these Discretionary grants to the Public Works Department or whether we should not lay by that particular sum for a better purpose from my point of view, namely, the purpose of education. Having made these observations regarding the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL'S remarks, I shall consider the main proposition itself.

The effect of the resolution which I move, Sir, would be to transfer a sum of three lakhs of rupees from the Discretionary grants of the Public Works Department to "Education," specially buildings required for schools. I think I need only establish in the first place that the grants allowed to the Public Works Department are excessive, and secondly that they could be better utilised for the purpose of school buildings. Some of my honourable colleagues might contend that in a year of financial stringency I should not propose that such a large additional grant of Rs. 3,00,000 should be made for school buildings when there is already a provision in the Budget of three lakhs, but I think that the lump sum provision of Rs. 3,00,000 is not specially for primary school buildings, but is intended for buildings of various educational purpose and therefore this lump sum provision cannot cover the purpose I have in view, namely, setting apart a special grant of Rs. 3,00,000 earmarked for primary school buildings. Now I contend that this transfer of Rs. 3,00,000 from the Public Works Department should be made mainly on the ground that this year when the finances have improved we have to consider the head of "Education" liberally as compared with the previous years. I think the department of Education has not fared as well as it should have fared in this year's increase of revenue as compared with the Public Works Department. I will endeavour to prove this by reading some facts and figures from the financial statement.

Now, those of us who have gone through the figures of the financial statement carefully will see that this year there is an advance of Rs. 53,00,000 in the revenue of the presidency as compared with the previous year. If we have Rs. 53,00,000 more of revenue during the next year, it is only fair to see how it has been distributed under the different heads. Analysing these, I find that out of this Rs. 53,00,000 which is an advance over the current year's provision, a large share—I may call it the lion's share,—no less than Rs. 21,00,000 has gone to the Public Works Department, the Educational Department, as compared with the current year, getting out of this Rs. 53,00,000 only Rs. 5,85,000; that is to say, in a year when fortunately our finances have improved, instead of keeping the two departments level so far as the distribution of the excess funds is concerned, we have treated the Public Works Department much more liberally than the Education Department; I venture to submit that the distribution of this amount is not fair so far as the Education Department is concerned. I shall read to the Council the figures of the comparative expenditure for the two heads during the last two years, when perhaps the curtailments and the retrenchments were very heavy. During 1915-16 and also during 1916-17 we allotted to these two departments as follows:—

Education in 1915 got Rs. 75,00,000 and the Public Works Department also got Rs. 75,00,000. They were on a level. In 1916-17, while the Education Department got Rs. 77,00,000, the Public Works Department were allotted Rs. 69,00,000, that is to say, during the current year the Education Department, so far as the total expenditure was concerned, was ahead of the Public Works Department and the expenditure for the Public Works

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GRANTS FOR PRIMARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

Department was thus cut down considerably. But immediately our finances improve what do we see for the next year? The Public Works Department is to get next year Rs. 91,00,000 as compared with Rs. 83,00,000 to the head of Education. Now we are all agreed, I suppose, and I also have the authority of the Government of India, in thinking that we must put in the forefront of our progress the department of Education and any other department must wait. I have the authority in this regard of the Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL, who in his concluding remarks on the Draft Financial Statement.....

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Member has given the figures for the Public Works Department for the years 1915-16, 1916-17 and 1917-18. Will he give them for the years before?

The Honourable Mr. KAMAT:—I have only taken the last two years for my purpose. During the last two years there was curtailment, and now that the finances have improved, we want to see how the increases in the revenue for the current year's Budget have been distributed. So far as I am concerned, the years previous to the last two years before the days of retrenchments do not bear on the subject to the same extent as the last two years of retrenchments do and, therefore, I have not gone into the previous years. Coming to the subject again, so far as Education is concerned, I believe the Honourable Finance Member also has, in his concluding remarks on the Financial Statement, stated that although a certain amount of caution is necessary, although the restrictions on expenditure which will have to be imposed on account of the war will remain in force, still "it would be unwise to hold up progress too long and in view of the great improvement in revenue it was recognised that larger provision for Education was necessary." Now I admit there is no doubt a larger provision of something like Rs. 8,00,000 next year for Education as compared with the current year, but as between the Public Works Department and Education, the expenditure for Education is not larger at all. Comparing the two departments between themselves, Education does not compare favourably at all and that is the chief cause of my complaint. We have heard two days ago, in the reports of the Imperial Legislative Council published in the papers, that the Government of India have, in spite of the financial difficulty created by the war, been very liberal towards Education and have allotted no less than Rs. 30,00,000 to the head of Education, and those that have read the speech of the Honourable Sir SHANKARAM NAIR will have noticed the high testimony and regard in which the Government of India hold Education even in these troublous times. If that is the case, I venture to submit, Sir, that the head of Education ought to have been treated much more liberally by this Government than the Public Works Department.

Coming now to the Discretionary grants, this year the Discretionary grants are something like Rs. 6,00,000 in all. I have taken the total as Rs. 4,00,000, but in addition to that there is the normal provision of Rs. 2,00,000, total Rs. 6,00,000. During the last two years these Discretionary grants were not so great, that is to say, in 1915-16 the Public Works Department had a grant of Rs. 3,00,000 only at their disposal for Discretionary grants; so also in 1916-17, that is the current year, they had not more than Rs. 3,00,000, and I think if the presidency could go on during the last two years with only a Discretionary grant of Rs. 3,00,000, I do not see why all of a sudden the heads of departments should have at their disposal by way of Discretionary grants such a large amount as Rs. 6,00,000. This Council will also bear in mind that in addition to the Rs. 6,00,000 this year there is also a reserve in the hands of Government, namely the reserve of Rs. 2,85,000, so that these Discretionary grants amount to something like Rs. 8,85,000, in all for the purposes of the Public Works Department. I contend that this is rather an excessive amount as compared with the last two years and as compared also with the grants for the Education Department. Now, if we just turn for a minute to see how these allotments are distributed, I think we shall find that a considerable amount of latitude has been allowed in their expenditure. For the year 1915-16, I find that out of this Discretionary grant of Rs. 3,00,000, the province of Sind had no less than Rs. 75,000 as purely Discretionary grant for itself. It may have no doubt been utilised for certain improvements, but all the same what I want to show is this: these are rather excessive grants, and they are spent on certain minor improvements here and there, whereas I contend that the improvement of school buildings is far more important and far more deserving an object than to place at the disposal of the heads of departments such large grants, purely for the purpose of minor improvements.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GRANTS FOR PRIMARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Balkrishna Sitaram Kamat.]

Reverting to the question of primary school buildings, I believe it is agreed and there is no doubt about the fact that so far as grants to Education are concerned, Government as well as the non-official members of this Council have one and the same object at heart. Government in their different reviews of the annual reports of the Department of Public Instruction have from time to time announced that the subject of primary school buildings has their best and serious attention. To make this clear I wish to quote from Press Note No. 2150, dated the 20th July 1913. It says:—

"The Governor in Council is accordingly pleased to direct that the system of free grants for the building and equipment of schools should be extended to municipalities also, for he considers that the need of good school buildings in municipal areas is as great as is the case with the District Local Board."

In the last paragraph of this Press Note we are told that:—

"For the present the existing annual provision of Rs. 1,00,000 referred to above will continue to be distributed on the same terms as before. The question of drawing upon it for the purpose of free grants will be considered when the allotment of Rs. 12,50,000 has been fully expended."

In this connection I must invite the attention of the Council and the Honourable Member in charge of Education to the grant of Rs. 12,50,000 given by the Government of India specially for primary school buildings, and I must also invite the attention of this Council to the fact that although this grant of Rs. 12,50,000 has been with us for the last four or five years, only a very small amount out of this, namely Rs. 2,85,000 has been actually expended during the last four years. In 1913-14 only Rs. 58,000 were spent and Government had something like Rs. 8,00,000 at their disposal for primary school buildings. What I wish to point out is this, that although the Government of India have given us this grant it has not been expended and it has remained with this Government for some time. What I fear would probably happen is this: in years of financial stringency all moneys which are not actually spent by us may probably lapse to the Government of India and we shall find ourselves in a difficulty to finance this particular purpose, when perhaps good times like this vanish away. Although therefore the Press Note of 1913 announced the good intentions of Government in this behalf what has been done since then is this: in the year 1915, somewhere towards the close of that year, Government issued another Press Note by which they practically stopped all building grants not only to primary schools, but to all educational institutions. After referring to the financial stringency what Government have declared in this Press Note is this: that "the payment of any grant which may have been promised by Government to educational buildings, not actually commenced, or of sites not actually purchased will be suspended until the financial situation improves."

Now, I confess when there was a stringency on account of the war two years ago, it was perfectly justifiable on the part of Government to issue a note that no more of these grants would be issued and no applications would be entertained from the managers of schools for building grants. But fortunately for the presidency this year we are in easier circumstances, and the object of my resolution is, if possible, to remove the embargo which Government have placed upon the distribution of these grants by the Press Note of 1915, and if possible to set apart and earmark during this year, this good year of prosperity, a certain amount for the purposes of grants for primary school buildings.

I will now describe to the Council in what state the school-houses in rural areas and villages are. Most of us who have gone down to these villages know that these school buildings are practically all of them ill-ventilated and scarcely roomy and spacious enough. In fact, in most of the villages, temples, dharamsalas and chavdis are doing the duty of school buildings. If at all we are to have any progress in primary education, we have to provide decent surroundings and decent school buildings as they are of certain educative value to the students. There can be no difference of opinion on that subject whatever. I venture to think, Sir, that during a time like this it is advisable to set apart a small amount of something like Rs. 3,00,000 for so deserving an object, namely, the building of the primary schools, and I trust this Council will accord a very sympathetic consideration to the resolution which I have placed before them.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI :—My Lord,—The resolution which the Honourable Mr. KAMAT has moved is one which ought to meet with sympathy from Government. The inconvenience felt by students for want of school buildings is too well known. Government itself is going to take action in that direction, but Government moves too slowly, and I think the object of the Honourable mover of the resolution is to expedite their action in this matter. What we want is that at least those villages which have themselves offered contributions ought to be provided with school buildings. I have particularly to urge that the claims of those villagers who have made voluntary contributions may be considered first. There are in my district several villages from which such contributions have been made but they have remained unutilised for the last so many years. In my own village contributions were made some 10 years ago and again 2 years ago, but the new school-house is not yet provided though the existing school-house is far too incommodious and in a very unsatisfactory condition. Then I have to point out that most of the larger schools are within municipal towns and the municipalities have to bear a larger burden than the local boards for them. On the other hand, many of the smaller municipalities are not in a position to spend large amounts on schools, and unless they contribute half the cost themselves they do not get contributions from Government. For these municipalities I think provision on a more liberal scale ought to be made by Government and unless some definite provision is earmarked for these school buildings, I fear the desired action will be as slow as ever. Large grants have been given to us by the Imperial Government for this purpose, but we have not been able to utilise them and our grants have remained unused for a long time for want of prompt action in the matter.

With these few words I support the resolution of my Honourable friend Mr. KAMAT.

The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS :—Your Excellency,—I have very great pleasure in supporting the resolution that has been put forward by the Honourable Mr. KAMAT in his characteristically lucid and exhaustive manner. There was one remark which fell from Your Excellency in the midst of the Honourable Mr. KAMAT'S speech which I wish to refer to. Your Excellency said that the Honourable Mr. KAMAT was quoting the figures for the last two years and he was asked to quote figures for the previous years. Probably the underlying idea was that whereas the comparison between the two departments in the years instanced by the Honourable Mr. KAMAT may have been favourable from his point of view, the reverse was the case from the Government's point of view when figures for other years were considered. What I want to say is that the Honourable Mr. KAMAT would not go so far as to say that there was any question of competition or race between the two departments. I would certainly go in for any expenditure which on its merits has better claims than any other item.

Now with regard to the two items which have been relatively put forward, I can certainly say that the Honourable Mr. KAMAT has made out a very strong case for his proposal in regard to Education. During the time that I have been in this Council, whenever any question on education was raised or whenever any motions came from Honourable Members with a view to increase the grants towards Education or towards the extension of Education, we had always a very wise and judicious suggestion from the late Honourable Mr. SHARP, whose loss is deplored by nobody more than myself, to the effect that whilst Honourable Members had the development of education so much at heart, they should not so much think of multiplying schools as of having more efficient teachers, having them better paid and having more well ventilated schools. That being so, I think the Honourable Mr. KAMAT has struck a very sound and wise note in inviting Your Excellency's and this Council's attention to the unsatisfactory state of the school buildings in the moffusil he has so graphically described, which requires to be urgently remedied. On the other hand, we are staking our money on "a dark horse". We give large discretionary grants to the Public Works Department. We do not know how these discretionary grants are utilized. I would certainly say that we can very easily trust the Public Works Department, and I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that they would be reasonably spending these grants, but in the absence of any explanation, any detailed information as to what these discretionary grants are intended for, how they are going to be utilised and for whom, we may fairly presume that we would not be far wrong in making them stand over for some time. They can be very easily curtailed without any strain on the works themselves, whereas, on the other hand, it appears that the work for which the Honourable Mr. KAMAT has moved this proposition is more important, especially considering the very easy nature of the finances at the present time. The Honourable Mr. KAMAT has placed before you all these points with great force and eloquence, and I have nothing to add to them, but simply to ask that this Council will be good enough to offer their most serious consideration to this question and support this resolution.

The Honourable Lieutenant-Colonel JAMES JACKSON:—Your Excellency,—I certainly do not rise to oppose any grants for the buildings of primary schools, but I only demur to the head from which the Honourable Mr. KAMAT proposes to take the money. Now, this is the head, I think, of grants to heads of departments. The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI has very forcibly said just now that these discretionary grants might stand over for an indefinite period, but I can tell him, as the Honourable Khan Bahadur PIR BAKSH would also be able to tell the Council, that if I do not get any discretionary grant this year, the town of Sukkur will continue to suffer from mosquitos. We must remember that these discretionary grants are the only money that heads of departments have got to deal with all sorts of minor works costing under Rs. 5,000. If the drain of a Government building goes wrong and I have no discretionary grant at my disposal, the outside people who are in close proximity must suffer. The grants that go to the Surgeon General, the Commissioners and to all the various heads of departments are very much more than mine. They go in the direction of sanitation and many other useful and necessary objects. The Honourable Members of the Council need not be in the least afraid that Government will be extravagant in allotments under this head. For the whole of the jails in the Bombay Presidency and Sind last year I got only Rs. 5,000. If the discretionary grant is to be cut down by Rs. 3,00,000, then I fancy my grant in the coming year will be brought down to an infinitesimal point.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GRANTS FOR PRIMARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

[Dewan Bahadur Kashinath Ramchandra Godbole; the President; Surgeon General R. W. S. Lyons.] [14TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE :—Your Excellency,—The proposition that has been placed before the Council by the Honourable Mr. KAMAT has my sympathy and warm support. At the same time, I must tell the Council that with the discretionary grants provided for in the Public Works Budget, many very useful small local works, the necessity for which is brought forward by the heads of departments, are carried out every year. The Honourable Mr. ARTHUR tells me that the discretionary grants that have been placed at his disposal during current year are Rs. 15,000 for Salt, Rs. 10,000 for Customs, and Rs. 13,000 for Excise. All these amounts are, as we have been told by Lieutenant-Colonel JACKSON spent on very useful works. But we have to bear in mind that the amount of these discretionary grants provided in the last year's budget was Rs. 3,00,000 and it has now been increased to Rs. 6,00,000. I think that the increased amount is capable of reduction. Some reduction should be made in the grant, and the amount thus reduced should be earmarked for the construction of primary schools in the local boards and municipalities of this Presidency. With this explanation I would suggest a modification of the Honourable Mr. KAMAT'S resolution to the effect that the Public Works Budget discretionary grants be reduced from Rs. 6,00,000 to Rs. 4,00,000, the saving of Rs. 2,00,000 being assigned for the construction of local board and municipal schools for primary education.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—The amendment proposed by the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE to the resolution moved by the Honourable Mr. KAMAT is—> "that the amount of Rs. 6,00,000 provided for the Public Works Department for 1917-18 be reduced to Rs. 4,00,000 and the saving of Rs. 2,00,000 be distributed among the local boards and municipalities of this presidency for the construction of primary schools."

This amendment is now before the Council.

The Honourable Surgeon General R. W. S. LYONS :—Your Excellency,—I have no objection to grants being made as far as improving the conditions of primary schools go but I object most strongly to any reduction of the discretionary grants placed at the disposal of the heads of departments. Before the war the discretionary grant for the Surgeon General was Rs. 62,000. Last year it was reduced to Rs. 17,000. As a result, many of the small works such as the roofing and tiling of hospitals and other sanitary provisions had, either to be postponed or only partly done. I will give a few instances to show how severely the stress is felt in the medical department and how badly it will be affected if there is to be any reduction of the small sum to be given in the coming year. The house of a sub-assistant surgeon at Jacobabad has fallen down, so he has to go and live in the bazaar. At Satara the roof of one of the hospital wards was unsound and as it was going to fall it had to be renewed. In order to do this I promised Rs. 1,000 out of the discretionary grant of this year and the balance from the next year's. At Sassoon Hospital a small room was required to be got ready for some Indian nurses. The preparation cost only Rs. 500, but I could only give Rs. 300 this year and promise the balance next year. Now these are all most necessary things and to my mind these grants are necessary for the small repairs some of which must be done. Another item that comes to my mind is in regard to improvements in the J. J. Hospital. The Municipality complained that the sanitary connections were not good. For these sanitary connections I gave them only half this year and promised the balance next year. For these reasons, I oppose most strongly the reduction of these grants which are shown as made to the Public Works Department. They are not really Public Works grants as they do not go to the Public Works Department at all but go for the building and repairs of the different departments. These grants have been cut down now for the last two years to the minimum and unless I get money in the coming year for these purposes, the dilapidations to buildings will upset the working of the Medical Department very greatly and undoubtedly cause extra expenditure hereafter.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GRANTS FOR PRIMARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Surgeon General R. W. S. Lyons; Mr. Balkrishna Sitaram Kamat; Mr. P. R. Cadell.]

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMAT:—Your Excellency,—I shall speak only on the amendment moved by the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE. He wants to have recourse to a via media as it were by cutting down the discretionary grants from Rs. 6,00,000 to Rs. 4,00,000. I wish to point out to him that already this year there is in the hands of Government in the shape of reserve one lakh of rupees more than last sear. I always look at this question from one point of view, namely, that for purposes of comparison, only the years during the war must be taken into consideration, not pre-war days. Taking these 3 years into consideration, I want to emphasise it once again that this year Government have kept in their own hands one lakh of rupees more as a reserve (that is to say, last year they had a reserve of Rs. 1,20,000 and this year they have a total reserve of Rs. 2,20,000 in addition to the 6 lakhs.) So, if there is anything which the Honourable Lieutenant-Colonel JACKSON or Surgeon General LYONS requires, those items could be met out of that additional Rs. 1,00,000, that is to say, out of this year's total of Rs. 2,20,000 which Government have already kept in their hands in addition to the 6 lakhs. There is another thing, which I wish to point out and it is this: that the Public Works Department make a separate provision for miscellaneous public improvements, which this year is Rs. 4,93,000. Now when there is this provision of nearly 5 lakhs of rupees for small miscellaneous works, I think the small works which the Surgeon-General wants to have done might be done out of these funds which are separately in the hands of the Public Works Department for miscellaneous expenditure and he need not draw upon the discretionary grants at all. These are the only things that I have to say on the amendment brought forward by the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE.

The Honourable Mr. P. R. CADELL:—Your Excellency,—I think this debate has had one useful result in revealing to us that there is one perfect optimist among the members of this Council. To most of us the present war is so horrible that optimism is impossible. That happy condition the Honourable Mr. KAMAT has however very nearly reached. He is not unaware of the war, he occasionally mentions its existence, but he talks of these happy times, this easy year, and anybody listening to his speech would imagine that we are at the height of prosperity. Of course, that is not so. The times are still difficult and they will be difficult and Government will want all the money that they can get. Government cannot draw unduly upon their reserve. It is obvious that we cannot do all that we want. If we had the money I am quite sure that the Members of Government would be as ready as anybody else to provide all that was available for school accommodation. Everyone is aware that everywhere the school accommodation at present is insufficient and unsatisfactory, but we have not got all the money which we want for the purpose and the comparison which the Honourable Mr. KAMAT has drawn is unfair for this reason, that he draws it between one department, the Public Works Department, and another department, the Education Department. Of course, that is not a true comparison. His comparison is between one branch, the building branch of the Education Department and the corresponding branches of every other department of the Government, because the money allotted to the Public Works Department is to meet the minor works of every other department. The Surgeon General and the Inspector General of Prisons have told you all the minor requirements of their departments. There are several others. The Honourable Mr. KAMAT has told you of the extremely inefficient way in which schools are housed in the villages. That is perfectly true. But the Honourable Mr. KAMAT is no doubt aware that the karkuns in taluka and civil cutcheries are housed in equally bad offices. In many places these people have to do very long hours of office work, and the same applies to many other branches of work. A portion of this grant to the Public Works Department is for repairing small bridges and roadways, which are works of the greatest utility to the people themselves. The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI has said that in giving these grants to the Public Works Department we may be spending money on a dark horse. There is no mystery really about the money that is spent. Any Honourable Member can perfectly well ask for details. Honourable Members who have listened to the speeches might go away with the impression that the Public Works Department has been provided with funds for all the purposes that they need. That is not so. We all know as regards major heads the Public Works Department every year call upon all the Commissioners and the heads of other departments to send up a list of their works, and I do not suppose that 10 per cent. of these works is done in the year in which they are sent up. They are sent up year after year until sanction is ultimately obtained. The same applies to minor works also. The Public Works Department can really meet only a very few of the demands that are made on them and in many cases the repairs that are due are delayed until they become absolutely uneconomical. Therefore, much as we may sympathise with the Honourable Mr. KAMAT'S objects, I think the answer to him must be simply that we have not got the funds. These discretionary grants to the different departments are absolutely necessary for the administration, not only for the convenience of Government or Government officers but for the convenience of the people themselves. I therefore trust that the Council will realize that it is impossible to agree to the requests made in this resolution.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GRANTS FOR PRIMARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

[Mr. P. R. Cadell; Mr. Alfred Lawrence Covernton; Mr. Ghulam Muhammad walad Khan Bahadur Wali Muhammad Bhurgri.] [14TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. ALFRED LAWRENCE COVERNTON:—It is not for me to oppose a proposal of this nature and when the Honourable Member proposes to give a larger grants to education I ought to receive it, if it is granted, with gratification. I do not like to look a gift horse in the mouth, but at the same time I ought to point this out. The grant is proposed to be a free grant for the building of primary schools. I presume by that is meant that the district local board or the municipality which has to erect a school building will apply to Government for a grant equal to the whole cost of the school building, so that the local board or the municipality incurs no expense for itself. Well, these are times in which building operations are difficult and expensive and it seems to me that it ought to be remembered that if Government are to be asked to incur a large additional expenditure on this account, an expenditure to which the local board or the municipality would contribute nothing, then Government should not be asked to do so at a time most unsuitable and unfavourable for building when it will get the smallest return for its money. It seems to me therefore that it should be borne in mind whether this is the best time for a large additional expenditure in this manner on primary school buildings. We have of course great need of them and the Educational Department do want them and any addition for the improvement of educational facilities is quite welcome. There is one other point. The erection of buildings is necessarily governed by procedure imposed by the conditions of the Grant-in-aid Code. The erection of school buildings takes some time to accomplish and it requires to be seen whether it is possible to spend the whole of this additional amount in the current year. That is a point which I have been unable to go into in the time at my disposal.

The Honourable Mr. GHULAM MUHAMMAD walad KHAN BAHADUR WALI MUHAMMAD BHURGRI.—I strongly support the resolution of my Honourable friend Mr. KAMAT. As far as the Director ot Public Instruction's argument, viz., that this time is very inopportune because if we spend money on school buildings now when things are dear we will not get a proper return on them. May I ask whether this very argument would not apply in the case of money given to the Public Works Department for hospitals and other purposes. I think that an argument of that sort will not generally hold good. With these remarks, Sir, I support the amendment.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GRANTS FOR PRIMARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

[Mr. Ghulam Muhammad walad Khan Bahadur Wali Muhammad Bhurgri; Mr. Raghunath Purshottam Paranjpye; Mr. G. Carmichael.]

The Honourable Mr. RAGHUNATH PURSHOTTAM PARANJPYE :—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the Honourable Mr. KAMAT'S resolution but on the chance of Government's accepting the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE'S amendment I am prepared to support that also. I was rather surprised to see that while the Inspector General of Prisons and the Surgeon General have stood up for their departments, in the case of the Education Department the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction was rather luke-warm. I may only say that the state of primary schools in all parts of the presidency is so unsatisfactory that we should not wait for doing our best to improve their condition and that this bad state of primary schools is seen not only in the villages and small places alone, but I am almost tempted to say that the same or worse is the case even in some of the bigger municipalities. I have had occasion to visit all the schools in connection with the Poona Municipality and I may say that I did not see any more lamentable sight than the schools in which thousands of boys had to study for the major portion of the day, say, 5 or 6 hours, in most insanitary and ill-ventilated places. Further the municipality is not very much to blame. They have to maintain a large number of schools in Poona and it is a great strain on the present finances of the municipality already; and while the municipalities ought to do a great deal more than they do at present, the only radical cure is to offer these free grants for the purpose of helping the municipalities where it is absolutely necessary. Again from the general point of view it is rather more important that boys in the municipal schools should have proper buildings than even schools in villages; as, when boys go out of school in the villages, they get the benefit of fresh air, but in larger towns the school is the only decent building in which the students can spend some parts of day, the other hours of the day being generally spent in unhealthy places where they cannot get fresh air; and, therefore, I welcome the idea of a free grant for school buildings especially for municipal area. It is only then that the grant will be spent immediately and for this particular purpose. The question in this case is as to the relative merits of grants for civil works and grants for school buildings, and I have not the least hesitation in saying that the necessity for building primary school is a very much more pressing necessity than the civil works. With these remarks I have great pleasure in supporting the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. G. CARMICHAEL :—Your Excellency,—I think the Honourable Mr. KAMAT who has moved this resolution said he had gone through the Financial Statement with very great care. In connection with the provision to which my Honourable friend refers I think he has overlooked one item in particular. My Honourable Colleague Mr. CHAUBAL will, I believe, point out to him what Government are actually doing in the matter and will point out the references in the Revised Financial Statement which the Honourable Mr. KAMAT appears to overlook. I think that in the present case the Honourable Mr. KAMAT might well, in fairness to the Council, have accepted His Excellency's suggestion and given us the figures of expenditure under the Educational heads and of the Public Works Department in 1913-14, the year before the war. I am afraid they did not entirely suit his argument, for you will find that the Public Works' actual expenditure under Civil Works in 1913-14 was Rs. 1,04,00,000 and under education Rs. 72,76,000. Now the figures for education in the war years are as follows :—

	Rs.
First war year actual expenditure	83 Lakhs.
Second war year actual expenditure ...	75 „
Budget for current year	77 „
Budget for next year	83 „

If you look to Public Works on the other hand you will find that the expenditure budget for the current year has gone down to 69 lakhs of rupees and out of that 2 lakhs of rupees were taken over for other purposes out of the Public Works grant leaving only Rs. 67 lakhs to spend. As I said last year the Public Works Department is the Department to which the shears are applied most drastically whenever any financial stringency occurs. The cutting amounted to one-third under Public Works Department. Under the Education Department head all that happened was that expenditure was deferred. There was no drastic retrenchment. With regard to discretionary grants the Honourable Colonel Jackson and Surgeon-General Lyons who know and have to utilize these grants have told us how very useful they are. The amount actually applied for by the officers and heads of departments concerned was as much as 9 lakhs of rupees but it was reduced in the Budget under consideration and brought down to 6 lakhs of rupees. I think I may safely say that under the Education Department head everything that the Director of Public Instruction asked for has been provided. The Honourable Mr. KAMAT suggests that as the Public Works Department has a very large reserve, the money required for the discretionary grant should be supplemented from that reserve, but we have a large programme in progress and we require a correspondingly large reserve. The discretionary grants for the last two years have been kept down to a very low figure indeed that is, 3 lakhs of rupees and there is no doubt that unless we give proper facilities to the officers who use these grants the efficiency of their work will be impaired. I am rather surprised to see the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE objecting and saying that the Public Works Department grants might easily be cut down. I think he must have a very clear idea of how useful these grants are for the various purposes for which they are allotted and I think he should have been the last person to raise this objection.

The Honourable Mr. MAHADEV BHASKAR CHAUBAL :—Your Excellency,—I find it necessary to direct the attention of the Council to exactly what the budget proposes on the subject of the present resolution. The resolution is :—

"This Council recommends that in the next year's Budget Estimates the provision for building grants for Education (item no. 96 in statement B of new or extraordinary items of expenditure) be increased from Rs. 300,000 to Rs. 600,000, the additional amount of Rs. 300,000 being earmarked for free grants for primary school buildings in the moffusil, and that this expenditure be met by a corresponding reduction in the provision of Rs. 400,000 made for Discretionary grants under Head 45, Civil Works—Public Works Department, item no. 217 of the said statement."

The resolution has, therefore, two aspects—one the Educational aspect of it and the other the Public Works Department aspect of it. Now as regards the educational aspect of it, Honourable Members will have noticed that the budget does already make a provision, which is referred to in the resolution itself as Rs. 300,000, for building grants. The Honourable Mr. KAMAT says that these are building grants and might include primary schools as well as other things, but in order to earmark free grants for merely primary schools he wants a large slice like Rs. 300,000 cut away from the discretionary grants of the Public Works

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GRANTS FOR PRIMARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

Department and allocated or added on to the Rs. 300,000 in item 96. Now his object is that after you have taken away three lakhs from the Public Works Department and put it on to the item 96 these three lakhs taken from the Public Works should be a free grant for primary school buildings, as he puts it. Now on this question you will note that the three lakhs which are put down in item 96 are to be given under the usual conditions for the grants for buildings. As regards the free equipment grant, I would ask the Council to look to item No. 113 of the Draft Financial Statement. Item No. 113 runs:—"Lump provision from the Imperial non-recurring grant of Rs. 31 lakhs and certain balances of the Darbar grant for 1912-13 added to it." Now I will tell you the previous history about this grant. In 1913 the Director of Public Instruction had proposed that the ordinary annual provision of one lakh for building grants to primary schools should be given as a free grant for the next five years. Government considered that and they thought that it was not necessary to reserve the sum of one lakh for free grants, but what they did is worth noticing. They made the following observations:—"Out of the non-recurring Imperial grant of Rs. 31 lakhs for the general improvement of education the Government of India have made an allotment of Rs. 12½ lakhs for the erection and equipment of schools, mainly of the vernacular elementary class, and Government will be glad to see the whole or a larger portion of this allotment devoted to the payment of free building and equipment grants, not only to local boards, but also to those municipalities which are in the greatest need of suitable school buildings but whose financial circumstances do not admit of their constructing them on the terms laid down in the ordinary grant in aid rules."

Now this item No. 113, which is a grant of Rs. 3,77,934, is a grant out of this grant of 31 lakhs, and out of this grant I might mention if you look to the distribution of it that Rs. 3,15,625 have been provided for this express purpose of free building and equipment grants; so that it is not only item No. 96 which stands and which has got to be utilised partly for the purpose of hostels, primary schools &c., but we have also got to look to item No. 113 and out of that item of Rs. 3,77,934 (I think the latest figure stands at Rs. 3,96,000 and odd) Rs 3,15,625 have been already ear-marked in the next year's budget for free building and equipment grants. Therefore you have the provision of Rs. 300,000 under item 96 plus a provision of Rs. 3,15,625 out of the provision of Rs. 3,77,934 under item No. 113. Well, it will depend upon the authorities no doubt to decide what they spend on primary schools and what they spend on hostels and other things out of item 96, but so far as item 113 goes, the Rs. 3,15,625 is specifically ear-marked for the purpose of free building and equipment grants. Therefore the result of what the Honourable Mr. KAMAT proposes would be that in addition to the three lakhs and odd out of item 113 he wants three lakhs taken away from the Public Works Discretionary Grant, so that it will be Rs. 300,000 under item 96, Rs. 315,625 under item 113 plus Rs. 300,000 which he intends to take away from the Public Works Department. As a matter of fact, we shall have a part of the three lakhs utilised for hostels and primary schools, and over and above that Rs. 315,625 is absolutely free grant for primary schools and their equipment; so that there is really, roughly speaking, an item of six lakhs already for the purpose for which the Honourable Mr. KAMAT is so anxious and in support of which other members have spoken so eloquently. Again here is an important aspect of the question which was touched upon by the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction which Honourable Members will kindly bear in mind when voting on this question When a sum like three lakhs or six lakhs is put down for building purposes you have got to consider the spending capacity or the capacity to utilise it. Nobody disputes that buildings for primary schools are necessary. The question is, is it necessary to put down in the budget a large amount like five or six lakhs in one year if you are only able to spend one or two lakhs out of it during that year. But that is what the Honourable Mr. KAMAT exactly asks you to do. As a matter of fact, I do not think—and those who have experience of the working of the Public Works Department will agree with me—that they will be able to utilise even the three lakhs and fifteen thousand and odd and the three lakhs provided under item 96 for the purpose throughout one year. You will always find from experience that at the end of the year grants of some lakhs come back again because they have not been utilised during the year and they have to lapse. Honourable Members perhaps remember the passage in "Martin Chuzzelwit" where in answer to Mr. Martin's anxious inquiries about artizans and labourers in the garden of Eden, his Lieutenant Mr. Tapley remarked: "The soil is so fruitful that public buildings grow spontaneously." Nor has the Public Works Department got any Aladdin's wonderful lamp to create a thousand buildings in a night. Buildings require time and men to bring them into existence out of brick and mortar', they won't grow like mushrooms. Therefore you have got to see that, so far as the Educational aspect of it goes, there is ample provision for the erection of school buildings and for their equipment in the provisions which have already been made.

While, therefore, on the one hand looking at it from the educational point of view nothing is likely to be gained to secure the object which educationists have in view, on the other hand, if you look to the Public Works Department aspect of it, as the heads of Departments have already told you they will be very materially hampered and crippled in providing many and sundry useful necessities if you cut down the provision made for discretionary grants to heads of Departments. On that point I ought to mention to you that it has been ascertained that the total demands of the various officers for these discretionary grants for 1917-18 amount to Rs. 9,76,000 against which Government have made a provision of 6 lakhs only Government have, therefore, already cut down their demand by over 3 lakhs and cutting down another 3 lakhs out of it would be simply disastrous. Well, you will see, therefore, what is likely to be gained by acceding to the resolution which has been moved. The Educational Department would no doubt, as the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction has said, be very glad to have the amount, but without being able to utilise it. On the other hand, the Public Works Department will be immensely crippled and all the heads of Departments will find themselves short of money for many useful purposes in the administration of the different districts. That is really the main issue before the Council. Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE moved an amendment for reducing the Public Works Discretionary Grant by 2 lakhs and giving those 2 lakhs to local boards and municipalities. As a matter of fact, I have read to you the wording of the resolution which reserves 12½ lakhs out of the non-recurring grant of 31 lakhs from the Government of India for the purpose of free building and equipment, grants to local boards as well as to municipalities and it was out of that the provision of Rs. 3,15,625 has been made, and therefore even looking at the amendment from that point of view, there is the same objection to taking away 2 lakhs as there is to taking away 3 lakhs. The simple issue before you, therefore, is whether the Educational Department should have the satisfaction of seeing a lot of money lying with the Accountant General which they are not able to utilise in the year and the Public Works Department finding themselves crippled and handicapped on account of the want of necessary funds in the coming year. That, it seems to me, is the plain and clear issue before the Council.

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMAT:—Your Excellency,—I would beg the Council not confuse the issues. The Honourable Mr. CADELL while referring to my remarks suggested that I was rather too optimistic; but I must point out to him that the financial circumstances have no doubt improved; let me assure him that I am fully conscious of the extreme necessity for caution but at the same time I will say this much that while Government should put their hands on the handle of the brake, I do not think they should press the handle too far. He said that clerks of the Revenue Department also have to work in insanitary office buildings. Well, in that case I submit it is for the authorities concerned to press for grants for that department, but so far as primary schools are concerned I have the authority of a Revenue Officer, namely, Mr. Mountford who when he was the Collector of the Poona District, had described in one of his reports that in the primary schools every year the eye-sight of a great many pupils was being ruined owing to bad school houses, and that it was no use having more schools unless we had decent school houses. The Honourable Mr. COVERNTON, as my Honourable friend Mr. PARANJPYE said, was rather lukewarm in his remarks He did not say that he did not want this grant but he said that he would be rather in a difficulty how to spend it. If that is his difficulty I can assure him that if he is prepared to admit the applications of municipalities and local boards, my municipality, the municipality of Poona will be the first to come and apply for a very large share of the grant, and he will see that a good deal of the grant is spent during the year. Coming to the remarks of the Honourable Mr CARMICHAEL he referred to the fact that I have not quoted figures for the year 1913-14 or the previous years As I have just explained I have compared how the different departments are faring at the hands of Government during the war-time only. I think any comparison during pre-war days would be more or less beside the point. If I wanted to compare the last 5 or 6 years' expenditure surely I would have brought in the figures for 1913-14. My purpose is to show how far during the war retrenchments have affected the different departments and I think the comparison with figures for 1913-14 is entirely beside the point. Coming now to the remarks of the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL, he drew my attention to the fact that item 96, namely, the provision of 3 lakhs of rupees was intended for building grants for primary schools.

The Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL:—I did not say that. I said that the grant was for hostels and other things also and that primary schools were only a part of the item.

The Honourable Mr. KAMAT:—That is exactly the conclusion that I drew, because if you turn to page 8 of the Draft Financial Statement in paragraph (j) this grant of 3 lakhs of rupees is described as follows:—"A larger provision is entered for building grants to educational institutions". That supports my inference that the whole of this grant of 3 lakhs of rupees will not go to primary school buildings as the Honourable Member has just now explained. I think I must explain to the Council why I sent in my resolution. The reason was that the Draft Financial Statement did not specify that there was so much provision for the primary school buildings. In other words the 3 lakhs referred to were to cover a larger ground than the ground I wanted to cover. Then again the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL referred to another provision of Rs. 3,15,625, namely, item No. 113. Here again the description given by the Honourable Member in charge of the Revised Financial Statement is like this. (Page 34 of the Revised Financial Statement, first paragraph, concluding portion). "The lump provision of Rs. 3,96,000 from the non-recurring imperial assignments is intended chiefly for (i) building and equipment grants to local boards, municipalities and European schools and (ii) grants for the provision of hostel accommodation at certain aided schools". As I explained in my preliminary remark this covers much larger ground; the distinction between my resolution and the provision already shown in the budget is this: The item provides a lump sum for hostel accommodation and primary school buildings together and what I wanted was that a distinct and separate provision should be ear-marked for primary schools alone. If the Honourable Member assures me that out of the Rs. 3,96,000 a lump sum of Rs. 3,15,000 is to go to primary school buildings and if he also assures me that the other sum of Rs. 3,00,000 which he quoted as making up the total sum of Rs. 6,15,000 will be allotted for buildings not necessarily for primary schools; if he is prepared to commit Government to the statement that this year there would be specifically ear-marked a lump sum provision of Rs. 3,00,000 and also another amouut of Rs. 3,15,000 as contained in item No. 113 making up a total provision for primary school buildings of Rs. 6,15,000, then I think every member of this Council will be partially satisfied, if not wholly satisfied, with the provision as shown in the budget. But both the Draft Financial Statement and the Revised Financial Statement as presented to Honourable Members do not make it perfectly clear that the provision made this year was to be Rs. 6,15,000, as has been told to the Council by the Honourable Member just now. There is one thing again to which I would like to refer. This item No. 113 which the Honourable Member in charge quotes, amounting to Rs. 3,77,000 is from the imperial assignment of Rs. 31 lakhs; it is a lump sum provision from the imperial non-recurring grant of Rs. 31 lakhs and certain balances of the Darbar grant for 1912-13 added to it. Naturally, the conclusion to which any Honourable Member would come to from the wording of item 113 would be this, that this grant is a saving from the Imperial grant of 31 lakhs, and in the last report of the Education Department on page 30 we are told about this grant of Rs. 31 lakhs is for technical education, and not school buildings. The note says:—"At the end of March 1915 there was a total unpledged balance of Rs. 29,727 available for technical education." I wish only to refer to this to show the confusion caused to the Honourable Members with regard to this item No. 113. This item is described as a provision from the grant of Rs. 31 lakhs, and if we refer to the description of that grant as given in the Report of the Director of Public Instruction, there we are told that it is for technical education. We are referred further on by the Director to paragraph 146 of his previous year's report; but tracing back the history of this grant to the previous report I find that it does not show (if I understand aright) that this grant of Rs. 31 lakhs is meant for primary school buildings at all. If it does, I shall certainly be glad if the Honourable Member will assure the Council.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: GRANTS FOR PRIMARY SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I really think that my Honourable friend may take my Honourable Colleagues assurance that this amount of Rs. 3,15,000 is to be given as a free grant for expenditure on primary school buildings.

The Honourable Mr. KAMAT:—If the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL can assure us that out of these grants . . . . . .

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I have informed the Honourable Member that this Rs. 3,15,000 is to be utilized for primary school buildings.

The Honourable Mr. KAMAT:—I would be perfectly satisfied to know if the Rs. 6,15,000 is for primary school buildings alone, but from the announcement made by the Honourable Member in charge I gather that Rs. 3,15,000 only is for primary school buildings. If I am right . . . . . .

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Really the Honourable Member is extraordinarily difficult to explain. I have told him twice in the clearest language possible that this Rs. 3,15,000 is to be given as a free grant for primary school buildings and equipment.

The Honourable Mr. KAMAT:—I accept the assurance. In that case there is nothing further to be said.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I wish to emphasise the remarks that have fallen from my Honourable Colleague that Honourable Members should be very careful in altering this grant in any way. As Honourable Members are perfectly aware this amount of Rs. 6,00,000 is given in discretionary grants which are to supply all departments with small amounts up to Rs. 5,000 throughout the whole of the Presidency. The object of the Honourable Member's resolution, and, I rather regret to find that of my Honourable friend DEWAN Bahadur GODBOLE'S amendment, is to reduce this particular grant. The obvious result of this would be that the various amounts allotted for the various repairs and minor works in various parts of the Presidency will have to be cut down which seems to me an extremely false economy. The Honourable Mr. KAMAT, I agree with my

Honourable Colleague Mr. CARMICHAEL, was, I won't say unfair, but he put forward a version of the reduction in expenditure, actuals with regard to Education and the Public Works Department which entirely suited his own case. Let me inform Honourable Members that my honourable friend has suggested that we must only consider war years. Well, that is exactly what I propose to do. In the year 1914-15 the actuals for Education stood at 83 lakhs and those for the Public Works at Rs. 1,04,00,000. In 1915-16 Education went down by 8 lakhs to 75 lakhs, and the Public Works went down by 29 lakhs to 75 lakhs. In the present year we have gone up again as Honourable Members will see in Education by 8 lakhs to 83 lakhs but we have gone up in Public Works to 90 lakhs only and the amount we have cut down with regard to Public Works is very much more than that we have ever done for education. We are trying to do what we can for the Public Works Department and at the same time we are increasing our expenditure on Education. I should like to urge on Honourable Members that Government do feel that it is important to hold these discretionary grants for the purposes of these various objects of which Honourable Members are perfectly aware, and as my Honourable Colleague has said, having regard to the fact that Rs. 3,15,000 are to be spent in free grants this year on buildings and equipment of primary schools and a part of a further sum of Rs. 3,00,000 will go also to primary schools, Government are inclined to think that they have made a very fair provision for this particular purpose this year and I therefore trust that this Council will not accept either the amendment or the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMAT:—Your Excellency, I think I might withdraw the resolution in view of the statement made by the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE:—I also want to withdraw my amendment, Sir.

The amendment and resolution were both by leave withdrawn.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—My Lord.—The resolution which I wish to move reads thus:—

"This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that, out of item No. 116 in statement B of the budget, the trained teachers entertained this year be paid the full face value of their certificates and that provision be made to increase the number of trained teachers and to increase the pay of the untrained head masters of primary schools."

My Lord, my attention was drawn yesterday by the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL to the difficulty he experienced in meeting this proposal owing to the fact that if teachers entertained this year were given the face value of their certificates, those entertained last year and the year previous would also have to be paid the same. My Lord, I was under the impression that under the orders issued two years ago all the trained teachers were being paid according to the face value of their certificates. In fact municipalities were asked to give retrospective effect to the orders of Government on this point, from the date that the orders were issued. I do not know if those orders were not carried out in any Districts during the last two years but I think when we have introduced code pay for these teachers, we must not stop the operation of those orders as even the code pay that the trained teachers are to get is so low. As regards untrained teachers, the matter is still more unsatisfactory. Your Excellency, on a reference to only the last year's report of the Director of Public Instruction you will find that out of a total of 2,700 and odd teachers we have got only 791 trained teachers and 1,981 untrained teachers. The proportion of untrained teachers to trained is about 3 to 1 and the proportion of untrained headmasters to trained headmasters is 2 to 1 or more. Now, that is not at all a satisfactory state of things. The average pay of an untrained head master is only Rs. 11. My Lord, even police constables who do not know much of the three R's are paid Rs. 12 and is it satisfactory that teachers who are far better educated should even when appointed as head masters of schools after several year's service should only get Rs. 11 a month. That is their average pay. That is the pay also in the case of trained assistant teachers. My suggestion, therefore, is that in the case of trained teachers they should all be paid according to the face value of their certificates. They join the training Colleges, my Lord, on the expectation that after completing their training they will get their pay according to the face value of their certificates. In all the Government departments the minimum pay of the clerical staff is raised from Rs. 12 to Rs. 15 and the same should be done in the case of the Educational Department. At any rate in the case of head masters Rs. 12 or Rs. 15 ought to be the minimum. When we have grants made by the Government of India for this very purpose, it is high time that this matter should be attended to and in the present hard war times, at any rate, this matter should receive immediate attention. Therefore, I have brought in this resolution with a view that all trained teachers, whether they may have joined this year or last year may receive the code pay and that in the case of untrained head-masters their minimum pay be raised to Rs. 15 or at any rate to Rs. 12. That is the gist of my resolution which I now place before the Council.

The Honourable Mr. MAHADEV BHASKAR CHAUBAL :—Your Excellency,—From some conversation I had with the Honourable Mr. UPASANI before the Council met I was in hopes that he would see his way to withdraw this resolution in view of the remarks which I had made yesterday and I was fully expecting him to do so. But I suppose he considers that his second thoughts are the best and therefore he has decided to move the resolution standing in his name. Now if you look to item 116, you will see that it is a lump provision of 2 lakhs for three different objects, namely, for opening of new primary schools, giving code pay to trained teachers, and entertainment of additional teachers in undermanned primary schools. Now the Honourable Mr. UPASANI does not say that any specific amounts should be allotted to any of these purposes. He does not propose that new primary schools should not be opened or that code pay should not be given to trained teachers: but his resolution recommends that the trained teachers entertained this year be paid the full face value of their certificates. My honourable friend says not only that these 2 lakhs should be appropriated for only one purpose, giving code pay to teachers, but that special preference should be given to the teachers that will be entertained during this year. I suppose he implies that new primary schools need not be opened. Well, I do not know how far Honourable Members would look upon this proposal with favour after they heard the speeches on the resolution preceding this one, when everybody was proclaiming the importance of having buildings for primary schools. I suppose nobody will be much gratified with a mere building, if a school is not opened in it and elementary instruction imparted to children in it. But that is apparently the result of Mr. UPASANI'S advocacy on these two resolutions. This Rs. 2,00,000 is partly for the purpose of opening new schools. Honourable Members are aware that when a new school has to be opened we do not at once erect a building and put the school into it. We originally start in a village, we see how the boys get into it and whether there is really a demand, and when we are satisfied on those points then the next idea is to furnish a school with a building. Therefore the opening of new schools ought to be as important an object in the view of educationists as the building of primary schools. Now I cannot understand why the Honourable Mr. UPASANI, with all his enthusiasm for primary education, should omit this item of opening new schools. The item to which he gives importance is giving code pay to the trained teachers who will be entertained this year. Now I have only to repeat what I said in the Council yesterday. On what grounds are you going to give preference to the teachers who have been entertained this year, as compared with those entertained last year and the year previous? It is admitted that those entertained during the last two years are not getting the face value of their certificates. Mr. UPASANI wants that the teachers entertained this year should have the preference and should get the face value of their certificates.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT: PAY OF TEACHERS, IN PRIMARY SCHOOLS.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Mahadev Bhaskar Chaubal; Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani.]

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI:—I have cleared that doubt in my speech to-day. I said that I was under the impression that under the orders of Government code pay was already being given to the trained teachers entertained last year. I do not want that the teachers entertained this year only should be given preference. I wish that all teachers entertained this year or last year should be given their code pay as soon as possible.

The Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL:—Well, I must beg my honourable friend's pardon. I was referring to the Resolution as he moved it. I certainly did not hear him move it in any amended form: and if as he says he made the point clear in his speech to-day he did not make it so as to be audible and intelligible at this distance. But my objection to his proposals does not end there. As I said yesterday, Government are enquiring into this subject at the instance of the Government of India. One of the objects as stated in the letter from the Government of India is to give adequate pay to teachers who are entertained, and they have asked a programme to be drawn up for the next five years, to ascertain exactly what teachers will be wanted and to have the necessary buildings or the necessary provisions for increasing the output of the trained teachers and to give them the code pay according to their certificates. That is the effect of the orders from the Government of India that I explained to the Honourable Mr. UPASANI yesterday. I told him that we have asked for information, on the different heads contained in this letter, from the Director of Public Instruction and when this information comes we shall be in a position to ascertain how many masters there are who have not been getting their code pay, how many of them we could afford to pay this year and in whose case it would have to be postponed to the next or succeeding years. Similarly with respect to the second item—to increase the number of trained teachers and to increase the pay of untrained head masters of primary schools. These are all subjects which will come in incidentally in considering the question of increasing the number of trained teachers. As a matter of fact, we have got to consider what we should do for opening new training colleges or whether there is a way of adding to the equipment of the existing colleges so that they will be able to give a larger output of trained teachers and what would be the best way to effect that. Those are the instructions which the Government of India have sent and which we are considering at present. I think this resolution as it stands at present is absolutely unworkable. The only difference I see between item 116 as it stands and what the Honourable Mr. UPASANI proposes is that no portion of these two lakhs should be utilised for the purpose of opening new schools, so that I submit the only question before the Council on the resolution moved by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI is this, that out of item 116 he wishes to confine those two lakhs purely to the two items of giving code pay to trained teachers and increasing the pay of untrained headmasters. Those are the items on which he wants the whole of this amount to be spent, and not in opening new primary schools. As I have already submitted to the Council, it is premature to discuss this question on the information which Government have at the present moment, and I think the assurance ought to be enough that this Government as well as the Government of India are doing their best to put things on as sound basis as possible during the next five years taking into consideration the present financial stringency. Notwithstanding the financial stringency the Government of India think that we cannot allow this question to stand over and that we must make such provision as we can during the next five years. This I think is enough to enable Honourable Members to decide whether they will accept or reject this resolution.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

[Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani; the President; Mr. G. S. Curtis.] [14TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—I think I ought to clear up my position by a few words. I want that this item should have special attention. New schools are wanted no doubt, but, as the late Director of Public Instruction pointed out, there is greater necessity to have efficient teachers for those that exist. However, with the assurance which the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL has given in this matter, I would not press my resolution and I would beg to withdraw it.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution by leave withdrawn.

I think it will perhaps be to the convenience of Honourable Members if we adjourn now till a quarter to three.

(The Council then adjourned for Lunch.)

(After Lunch.)

The Council re-assembled at 2-45 p. m.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT.—Order, order. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—The next head of expenditure is, 24 A, Medical. This head of expenditure has suffered considerably owing to the items of expenditure which have to be deleted on account of the financial stringency due to war. In 1917-18 a few of these items have been restored.

The usual provision on account of the Government grants for the opening of new dispensaries which had been reduced to half the amount since the outbreak of the war has been restored to the original figure of Rs. 30,000—Rs. 20,000 for non-recurring grants and Rs. 10,000 for recurring grants. A special provision of Rs. 30,000 has also been made on account of the treatment at the several Civil Hospitals of sick and wounded returning from the front. A special feature of the budget is the proposed Government grant-in-aid (Rs. 1,916 being half the estimated annual expenditure) to Seva Sadan Society, Poona, for the training of Indian women as nurses at the Sassoon Hospital, Poona. Owing to the continuance of the financial stringency the following schemes which have met with the approval of the Secretary of State have not been introduced:—(1) Separation of the combined post of Chemical Analyser, Sind, and Port Health Officer, Karachi; and (2) Abolition of the post of Principal of the Grant Medical College and the creation in its stead of a Dean for the better administration of the College and the Jamsetji Jejeebhoy Hospital.

I proceed at once to the head 24 B, a head which has been now separated from Medical and deals entirely with Sanitation. In view of the financial situation created by the war, a provision of Rs. 1,80,000 only was made in the current year's budget under the head "24 B—Sanitation" on account of grants-in-aid to local bodies for sanitary projects. Last year a grant-in-aid of Rs. 1,34,760 was sanctioned for the Alandi water supply scheme, but partly in view of the necessity for stringent economy at this juncture and partly on account of the success which appears to have attended the temporary water supply arrangements made at the last Kartiki fair, the execution of the sanctioned scheme has, for the present, been held in abeyance. The grant-in-aid on account of this scheme has been withdrawn during the current year. The total provision in the current year on account of grants for sanitary projects thus amounted to Rs. 1,80,000 plus Rs. 1,34,760, that is, Rs. 3,14,760 in all. Out of this amount, grants aggregating Rs. 1,92,241 have been sanctioned the principal grants being those of Rs. 30,481 towards the cost of the scheme for providing piped water supply for the Poona sewage effluent area, and Rs. 14,286 towards the cost of the scheme for treating Poona City water supply with alum and chlorine. A fresh grant-in-aid of the amount of Rs. 20,000, which had lapsed to Government was sanctioned to the Lonavla Municipality for its water supply scheme. An allotment of Rs. 20,434 was sanctioned for the purchase of boring tools and plant in connection with the improvement of water supply. A sum of Rs. 20,000 was also sanctioned for expenditure on original works in connection with the development of Salsette as a residential area, and has been fully utilized. The Sanitary Board have been authorised to sanction projects costing up to Rs. 20,000 and to make grants up to a limit of Rs. 10,000 for any one work. For the latter purpose a lakh of rupees was allotted to the Board every year up to 1915-16. In the current year, in view of the financial situation created by the war, a sum of Rs. 50,000 only was placed at the disposal of the Board for the purpose, which has been completely utilized by that body. In view of the urgency of the project for the improvement of the water supply at Sukkur, we have ordered that the execution of this project, which was already sanctioned by Government and estimated to cost Rs. 4,34,317, should be undertaken, leaving to the end such items as can be temporarily postponed. The whole charge on this account has, for the present, been ordered to be met from the Sukkur Municipality's cash balance which amounts to over three lakhs of rupees, and the question as to what contribution Government should make towards the cost of the scheme will be considered when the financial situation improves.

In the next year's budget estimates, a sum of Rs. 4,85,000 has been provided on account of grants-in-aid to local bodies for sanitary projects. This provision includes; (i) Rs. 1,25,000 for a grant-in-aid in connection with the Nandurbar water supply scheme, (ii) Rs. 1,00,000 for allotment to the Sanitary Board to enable that body to make grants for minor sanitary projects, and (iii) Rs. 1,00,000 for a subvention in connection with the undertaking of improvements to the Hyderabad water works.

The provision made in the current year's budget on account of the entertainment of Health Officers and Sanitary Inspectors by municipalities amounts to Rs. 30,000. This provision consists of (i) an imperial recurring grant of Rs. 20,000 and (ii) a provincial allotment Rs. 10,000. Out of this provision, grants aggregating Rs. 27,000 approximately have already been sanctioned. The Sanitary Commissioner for the Government of Bombay submitted a fresh scheme which contained proposals for the regrouping of municipalities for the purpose of appointment of Health Officers and Sanitary Inspectors and for the improvement of their pay and prospects. As this scheme involves a considerable increase in expenditure, it has been postponed until the financial situation improves. The ensuing year's provision on account of the entertainment of Health Officers and Sanitary Inspectors has been raised to Rs. 40,000 the additional Rs. 10,000 being provided from provincial revenues.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—24-B, Sanitation (Provincial). The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

24-B, Sanitation (Provincial).

This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that out of the provision under No. 155 (grants-in-aid of sanitary projects) in statement B, the Nandurbar water-works scheme be executed this year.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—As provision has been made for this work in this year's budget I do not wish to press my resolution. I only hope that the work will be commenced soon. I, therefore, beg leave to withdraw the resolution.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution by leave withdrawn.

The Honourable Mr. G. CARMICHAEL:—Your Excellency,—Under the head "Agriculture", the expenditure proposed is Rs. 15,71,000 against Rs. 12,66,000 in the revised estimate. Of the total Rs. 1½ lakhs is on account of Bombay's share of the profits arising out of the Government wheat purchase scheme operations carried on in 1915. The amount has been entered in lump because intimation of the assignment was received after the details of the new items for inclusion in the budget had been considered. The new items to which I may invite the attention of the Council are Rs. 5,000 in aid of a scheme for organizing a supply of pure milk for Poona city. It is intended that the scheme should serve as an experiment and as an example of what can be done in this direction in the interests of public health, particularly the health of infants and children.

Another item of importance is the provision to enable the Agricultural Engineer, who is doing most useful work, to extend his work-shop and his operations generally. The buildings for the Agricultural School at Jambul in the Thana district are almost complete and it is now necessary to provide for the teaching staff. A new sub-station is proposed for demonstration in connection with the cultivation of warkas lands in Ratnagiri district. It will also be noticed that larger provision has been made for extension of the experimental farm which was opened last year in Broach district for the supply of pure cotton seed of the most profitable variety. Lastly there are two items totalling Rs. 30,000 for an object in which His Excellency takes a special interest, namely the improvement of the breeds of cattle of this presidency. It is proposed to open a cattle farm for the Deccan at Sholapur and another for the preservation and improvement of the famous Karachi stock. The Honourable Mr. KEATINGE, the Director of Agriculture, has not yet sent up details and we are awaiting them.

Under "Scientific and Miscellaneous" it has been decided to provincialise the Steam Boilers Inspection Department which previously was financed as a Fund. Of late years the fund has tended towards insolvency, and it becomes necessary for Government to undertake the responsibility for the deficit. It is possible that something may be done to improve the receipts which ordinarily may be expected to balance this expenditure. Careful attention is being directed to this point.

Another item which calls for notice is the provision of Rs. 50,000 for the Imperial Science Institute, Bangalore, in-aid of a scheme for the investigation of oil, fat, and allied industries. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI in his letter, to which I referred yesterday, suggests that instead of spending more money on buildings at Bangalore, the contribution should be given for scholarships to students undertaking research work, and advanced study in oils and fats. The scheme and its origin is fully explained on page 15 of the Revised Financial Statement and from the description of it given there it will be seen that it has been worked out after a very full discussion by a committee appointed by the Council of the Institute for the purpose and I think we may safely assume that from the business point of view it is calculated to lead more directly to the solution of the problem than the method suggested by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI. Again, I may mention that the provision has been recommended by our own Advisory Committee who after careful consideration have advised that subject to certain conditions we should be ready to take a share in this work. I am glad to have this opportunity of thanking on behalf of Government the Chairman and Members of our Advisory Committee on Industries for the invaluable service they have rendered. Their honorary task has been a very laborious one and we as Government warmly appreciate the readiness with which the burden of it was undertaken and the efficiency with which it has been discharged. As a result of their labours not only have we obtained a valuable record of advice, suggestions and information relating to industries and possibilities of industrial progress, but we hope to see some new enterprises successfully launched in the near future. I may add that they have also dealt very fully with all the questions raised by the Indian Industrial Commission and the Bombay memorandum will, I am confident, be very helpful to that body.

Under the head "Superannuation Allowances and Pensions," there is no special feature upon which I need comment.

REVISED FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—The next head is XXIII, Stationery and Printing,—30. The only item of interest is the reduction in the budget grant which stands at Rs. 12,80,000 as against Rs. 14,05,000 in the current year. This reduction is due to considerable economy in the management of the Central Press and in the Central Stationery Stores.

The next item is Miscellaneous, the following items of which are of importance:—

(i) Government propose to appoint as an experimental measure, in lieu of official Presidents, namely, the Collectors, non-official Presidents for selected district local boards in the Presidency, viz., one in the Northern Division and two in each of the Central and Southern Divisions, and to give them the powers which the official Presidents exercise at present. In order, however, to separate the ordinary administration of the boards from the Collector's office of which it is now practically one branch, it is necessary that a self-contained office, together with the services of a Chief Officer, should be placed at the disposal of the non-official Presidents. As the district local boards are unable to meet the expenditure on this account, it is proposed to grant them subventions equivalent in amount to the cost of the entertainment of the Chief Officer and of the present local fund establishment in the Collector's office. A provision of Rs. 30,000 for this purpose has been made in the ensuing year's budget under the head "32, Miscellaneous"; and

(ii) in 1915, Government approved a scheme for the abolition of tolls on local board roads (exclusive of tolls on bridges and ferries). Under this scheme the district local board concerned is to be granted an annual contribution equal to the average of its receipts from tolls, on the condition that the whole amount is spent by the board on the consideration and maintenance of roads exclusively. As in the case of abolition of tolls on provincial roads the scheme is to be introduced gradually and as speedily as the state of provincial finances permits. The district local boards of Ahmedabad, Satara, Kanara, Bijapur, Poona, Ahmednagar, Nasik, West Khandesh, Belgaum and Dharwar accepted this offer of Government. The district local boards of Ahmedabad, Satara, Kanara and Bijapur have been granted the concession with effect from the year 1915-16 at an annual cost of Rs. 19,800. A provision of Rs. 20,000 was accordingly made for the purpose in the current year's budget under the head "32, Miscellaneous". The amount required for making the necessary subventions to the remaining six district local boards is estimated at Rs. 1,20,000 approximately. An additional lump provision of Rs. 25,000 is made for the purpose in the ensuing year's budget under the head "32, Miscellaneous", so that the total provision for the scheme during next year amounts to Rs. 45,000.

I have one more remark to make with reference to 24-B as I thought it came under "Miscellaneous". An additional provision of Rs. 4,864 has been made for grants to new village sanitary committees in this Presidency as follows:—

	Rs.
Northern Division	688
Southern Division	3,000

and Rs. 5,000 have been provided for the establishment of a laboratory at Karachi for the examination of drinking waters in Sind. Rs. 50,000 have been provided in connection with the development of Salsette. Of this, Rs. 45,000 are for grants to local bodies for town-planning schemes and Rs. 5,000 are for ordinary development work. Provision for the grant of Rs. 15,000 to the Bombay Municipality for anti-malarial measures in the City has also been made. As only Rs. 9,000 out of Rs. 16,000 provided in the current year for a motor launch for the Port Health Officer are likely to be expended, a provision of Rs. 7,000 has been made on that account in next year's budget. Half of the charges are payable by the Port Trust. Rs. 56,000, which include Rs. 25,000 for charges in connection with inoculation, have been provided for plague expenditure. This amount is in excess of the current year's provision by about Rs. 5,000. The excess is to meet a severer outbreak of plague anticipated next year. A provision of Rs. 62,000 for the village water-supply and boring and jumper experiments has been made. In consequence of the great rise in the prices of articles an additional provision of Rs. 22,000 has been made for the purchase of bottles, syringes, medicines and disinfectants required by the Parel Laboratory. A large portion of the extra expenditure will be recovered from the military and other departments to whom the articles will be supplied.

The Honourable Mr. GEORGE CARMICHAEL:—Your Excellency,—The next head is "Reduction or Avoidance of Debt", now disappears from the budget under the arrangement which has been approved of by the Government of India. The old arrangement was that every year we were given a credit of Rs. 13,70,000. This amount minus the actual expenditure incurred on direct famine relief from year to year was allowed to accumulate until the credit reached a total of Rs. 80,00,000. The direct expenditure on famine was met out of the accumulated balance of the money thus placed at our credit by the Government of India and was accounted for under the item 33, Imperial. If the expenditure exceeded Rs. 80,00,000, then the Provincial had to bear the excess. The revised arrangement is that Provincial pays for one-fourth of famine expenditure and the Imperial three-fourths. It is a simpler arrangement from the accounts point of view and I do not think it will prove unfavourable for the Provincial, we have asked that account should be taken not merely of the direct famine expenditure, but of some of the indirect items also. We have not heard so far what conditions the Government of India have made or how far they have accepted our view with regard to this particular proposal of classification of the expenditure, but I gather from what Sir WILLIAM MEYER said in the Imperial Council that our proposals have been favourably considered.

Under "Irrigation", which is the next head, there is no special feature of which I need take notice. An increase of revenue is expected from the Sind canals, while the proposals for expenditure are very much on the same basis as the budget for the current year.

Under "Civil Works" a total grant of 90 lakhs has been proposed. One reason for adopting this figure was that before the war it was laid down, not as a definite rule but as a rule for guidance, that 90 lakhs would be an appropriate sum to allow out of our revenues, as they then were, for Civil Works. Since the war, as you are aware, our expenditure has had to be restricted, so a very drastic retrenchment was made under this head. The result is that our programme has been very seriously delayed and in some respects, I think, with regard to our roads for example, there has been an actual deterioration. Of the new works which are proposed for inclusion for provision out of this 90 lakhs of rupees I may mention that it has seemed specially desirable to undertake a large programme of works for police buildings. We are very far behind in providing for our policemen the accommodation which it is our duty to give. We must provide free quarters for our policemen or, if we do not provide free quarters, we have to give them hutting allowances. It is very much better that the police should be properly housed. It undoubtedly promotes the efficiency of the force if they are well housed and expenditure for this purpose is justifiable even in this present time of stringency, because it enables us to save the increasing expenditure on hutting allowances. Another small item to which I may refer under new works is the provision which is being made for developing some of the sites in Bombay City which belong to Government. These have for some years been unutilised and it is now proposed to make a beginning in utilising them.

And, lastly, considerable expenditure is being undertaken on our roads to bring them up to the proper condition. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS has explained what is being done with regard to the abolition of tolls on local board roads. We are, in addition to the provision of Rs. 25,000 which has been made for that purpose, undertaking to provincialise a certain road belonging to one of the District Local Boards did not accept the proposal to abolish their tolls. On that road there are tolls which are a great burden to the people. They bring in a considerable revenue, I think, rather more than the District Local Board are actually spending on the road in question. In any case we propose to take over the road as a provincial road, and to keep it in repair as a provincial road and thus be able to abolish the toll thereon.

That concludes all the heads in the Revised Financial Statement.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—A Bill further to amend the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879 (Bill No. V of 1916), Second Reading. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—May it please your Excellency,—I rise to propose the second reading of the Bill to amend the Port Trust Act, 1879.

Motion for the Second Reading of the Bill.

The Select Committee which was appointed at the last sitting of this Council have given careful consideration to the Bill as a whole and their report has been printed and is now on the table. As a result of their careful consideration the Select Committee have recommended that a slight amendment should be made in clause 2, the effect of which will be to limit the application of proviso (b) to section 21 of the main Act to persons in temporary employment other than those in receipt of a monthly salary of Rs. 150 or who are engaged for a definite period of over six months.

This amendment will get over the difficulty to which allusion was made at the last meeting, which is at present occasioned by the necessity of submitting schedules or proposition statements for tally clerks and similar temporary hands, without unduly enlarging the powers of heads of departments. As regards the rest of the Bill the Committee with the exception of one Honourable Member have no remarks to make.

The Honourable Member in question is the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE whose minute of dissent is attached to the Committee's report.

The Honourable gentleman proposes to insert the word "non-pensionable" before the words "officers and servants" in clauses 3 and 6, and before the words "pilots and officers and servants" in clause 7 of the Bill. When I first read the Honourable Member's amendment I was reminded of a story I heard in my youth. There was written, I believe, a natural history of Iceland and a special chapter was devoted to snakes. The chapter started with a long description of the snake, how the animal lived under grass, drank milk and bit human beings if they came too near to it. After proceeding over two pages to explain the natural characteristics of the snake the chapter wound up by saying that there were no snakes in Iceland. Now, Sir, the effect of the proposed amendment is to empower the Port Trust to grant gratuities with the sanction of Government to the widows and children of persons who die in its employ. What does the Honourable Member say? He says that it is very wrong that the widow and children of any pensionable servant of the Port Trust should receive a gratuity and that Government's rules do not allow it being done. But he finishes up at the end by saying that there are no pensionable servants in the Bombay Port Trust.

Well, Sir, I should have been content to leave matters there. But the Honourable Member quite rightly points out that under the law as it stands the Board have power to appoint pensionable servants and that they may exercise the right in future. And in order to guard against the possibility of the Board using their powers and giving them pensionable servants gratuity, the Honourable Member wishes to insert the word "non-pensionable" before the words "officers and servants."

Now, Sir, we will examine the Honourable Member's arguments. The whole of his argument turns on a sweeping assertion made by the Honourable Member to the effect that such gratuities to widows and children are not allowed in the case of officers and servants of Government. That statement is not accurate. In Article 924-B of the Civil Service Regulations it is provided that the Government of India have power to grant pensions up to Rs. 10 and gratuities in lieu of those pensions, provided they do not conflict with the rules. And I have here a list of 29 cases which occurred in the past few years. In these cases the Secretary of State has sanctioned special gratuities to the widows and children of deceased officers when special circumstances such as great distress, indigence and so forth necessitates. Of course it must be understood that such gratuities are not a usual feature of our administration, but it is a fact nevertheless that in certain special cases gratuities are given. I could mention some which I know must be well known to the Honourable Member—certainly one case of an officer in Khandesh in which the circumstances of the widow and children were held in the opinion of the Secretary of State to justify a gratuity. As I said there are over 20 other cases where gratuities amounting to a few months' pay and that sort have been given by Government, when the circumstances were distressing, to enable the widow to keep the wolf from the door until some better arrangement could be made.

Now, Sir, as the Honourable Member rightly points out, the Port Trust have no pensionable servants at present and they work on the principle of the provident fund. When a subscriber dies his widow and children will have the amount which he has contributed to the fund and he is not so badly off as a pensionable servant. At the same time it is possible that the servant may be subscribing only for a year or two and consequently the amount to his credit may be small. Also it is possible that the Port Trust might, just as a Municipality or a local board or a Native State does, borrow the services of a pensionable servant of Government. The Port Trust might want to start a school for the training of naval apprentices. They might borrow a Government servant and become liable for his pension in the same way as local boards and municipalities are. If that school-master should by chance die and if he should leave a widow and children who were in a state of real indigence, I am quite sure the Honourable Member, if he were a member of the Board himself, would not have the heart to refuse that widow and children a competence which is all that any Government would sanction to carry them over that awful time which may succeed for six months or so after the bread-winner's death. Therefore, I ask the Council to hold that the clause as at present drafted can do no harm.

The Council will notice that clause (7) of section 22 of the existing Act says:—"The Board shall from time to time frame regulations, with the previous sanction of Government, for determining the conditions under which pensions, gratuities or compassionate allowances may be paid to any of such officers and servants injured, or to the surviving relatives of any of such officers and servants killed in the execution of their duty". And we propose to insert after clause (7) of section 22 of the existing Act, the following clause as clause (8), namely, "(8) with the previous sanction of Government, for determining the conditions under which gratuities may be paid to the widows or children of any such officers and servants who may die in the service of the Board".

Well, Sir, the Honourable Member is perfectly right in saying that it is not desirable that any local body should be able to offer more desirable and better terms than Government. But I can assure him that he may trust Government to see to that. Government will always take very great care to see that no local body shall deal with undue liberality towards its employees. But, Sir, there is no reason why the converse should be the case. Why should an employee of the Port Trust who might have been in the early years of his service also an employee of Government be worse treated than if he had passed his time wholly in Government service".

As I said the point is a very small one and it seems really rather absurd that a body like the Port Trust consisting of business men dealing with very large sums of money should not be trusted to grant gratuities of a very small sum on obtaining the sanction of Government in every case. Government and the Port Trust between them can at any rate be trusted not to waste the resources of the Trust and it is not desirable to impose any such restrictions as that proposed by the Honourable Member.

With these words I beg to move the Second Reading of the Bill.

Bill read a second time.

The motion for the second reading of the Bill was then put to the vote and carried.

Bill read clause by clause

Clauses 1 and 2 were then put to the vote and carried.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE:—Your Excellency,—The amendment to clause 3 of which I have given notice runs as follows:—

"Insert the word 'non-pensionable' before the words 'officers and servants'".

The small amendment which I want to effect was put forward by me during the deliberations of the Select Committee. The Honourable Member in charge of the Bill then said I believe that the Local Government had instructions from the Government of India not to make the conditions of Port Trust service more attractive than Government service. If that is the view of the Government of India the words that I have proposed to insert seem to be necessary. In the case of the widows and children of Government employees there is no provision which authorizes the giving of a gratuity. Clause 3 as put down in the Bill will authorize the grant of a gratuity in the case of the pensionable servants of the Port Trust. As pointed out by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS the Port Trustees have power under section 22, clause (5), of the Port Trust Act of giving pensions to their servants. If they give such pensions to their servants, clause 3 of the Bill will place them in a better position than the servants of Government, and the instructions of the Government of India will not be fulfilled. I therefore propose to insert the word "non-pensionable" before the words "officers and servants". If the member in charge of the Bill gives me an assurance that the Government of India have no objection to a provision of this character I am prepared to withdraw my amendment.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—I may put it in this way. The rules were sent up to the Government of India and they were returned with the request that the general tenor of the rules should be altered so as to make it clear that the condition of service in the Port Trust must not be more favourable than Government service.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE:—Then I adhere to my amendment because I think that the clause as worded in the Bill makes the position of the pensionable servants of Port Trust more favourable than the pensionable servants of Government.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Has the Honourable Member seen rule 249 of the Civil Service Regulations?

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE:—Yes, I have.

Amendment to clause 3 was then put to the vote and lost.

Clauses 3 to 5 were then put to the vote and carried.

PORT TRUST BILL: BOILERS BILL.

[Mr. Kashinath Ramchandra Godbole; Mr. G. S. Curtis; the President; Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas.] [14TH MARCH 1917.]

Clause 6.—The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE :—This amendment is exactly similar to my previous amendment and I do not want another rebuff from Government and I therefore withdraw this and my amendment to clause 7 also.

Amendments to clauses 6 and 7 were by leave withdrawn.

Clauses 6 and 7 were then put to the vote and carried.

The preamble was then put to the vote and carried.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—Your Excellency,—I now rise to move that the Bill be read a third time and passed into law.

Bill read a third time.

The motion for the third reading was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—A Bill to amend the law for the inspection and management of boilers in the Presidency of Bombay (Bill No. VIII of 1916), Second Reading. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—May it please your Excellency,—I rise to propose the second reading of the Bill to amend the Act (Bombay Act II of 1891) for the inspection and management of boilers and prime movers in the Presidency of Bombay.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS moves the Second Reading of the Bill.

The Bill has been carefully considered by the Select Committee whose report is a somewhat lengthy one and has been printed and placed on the table; and will have been read by Honourable Members.

I have little to add to it. It will be noticed that the Select Committee has for reasons given at length in their Report decided to delete the provisions proposed in the Bill for the appointment of a whole-time examiner. They have also decided to delete section 42 which empowers the Governor in Council to apply certain provisions of the Act to prime movers. This section was, it will be remembered by older members of the Council, the subject of prolonged discussion in 1891 when the original Act was passed. Experience however now shows that the section is now no longer required, and it may now disappear from the Act.

In other respects the Committee have decided to retain the clauses relating to the Chief Inspector and other changes but they have made some slight modifications which are very important and the Bill as now finally drafted, I think, will effect an improvement in the existing Act in point of clauses.

I would now move that it be read a second time.

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS :—In rising to support the second reading of this Bill I would, at the outset, express, on behalf of the industrial interests concerned, our grateful appreciation of the impartial and unbiassed manner in which Government have treated this Bill in the Select Committee. It is not questioned that the main reason of the introduction of this Bill was the proposed change in the constitution of the examining body for issue of certificates. The Bill has emerged from the Select Committee totally shorn of this clause, and the Select Committee are quite right when they observe that public opinion is not in favour of a full time examiner. This, and the other ground-mentioned in paragraph 2 of the Select Committee's report, will, I am sure, commend themselves to this Council and it is unnecessary at this stage to speak at further length on this matter. May I express the hope that in future too in legislation affecting industrial interests Government will be able to show similar consideration for the opinion and views of the mercantile communities concerned in such legislation.

BOILERS BILL.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas; Mr. Patel; the President.]

The first omission to attract one's notice, next, is the omission of the enabling clause regarding prime-movers. This omission was very strongly urged by the mercantile communities in 1879, but the clause was kept on in spite of their protest. I take it as a sign of the time that this omission should have been so readily accepted by Government even though forty years later than was suggested by the mercantile communities.

My Lord, the course of the Boiler Bill legislation in and out of the Council during the early eighties was not very smooth. Act V of 1873 was strongly opposed in this Council by the Honourable Mr. BYTHELL, and what was called the Boiler Inspection Act of 1876, subsequently substituted by Bill No. 9 of 1878, had scathing criticism from the Bombay Chamber. In 1876 the Chamber said:—

"The Chamber considers that examinations are altogether unnecessary but, if insisted on, that oral examination would be sufficient, and that questions should be of a practical character, relating only to the working of boilers, instead of technical questions implying knowledge of the business of mill-wrights and engine-builders, which it is quite unnecessary for a person placed in charge of a factory boiler or engine to possess. The examination should not extend beyond a few simple questions touching the safe use of boilers."

and it also said:—

"The Chamber considers it quite unnecessary to have certificates of different classes: a man who can work one boiler can work any."

All this holds good today, and it is gratifying to see that Government have dropped the proposed change in the examining body.

My Lord, from the report on the administration of the Boiler Inspection Department for the year 1915-16 I see that the working of the said Department shows a loss of Rs. 22,000 roughly, which is made good from the fund of Rs. 1,00,000 Government paper to the credit of the fund. From the year 1917-18 Government are taking over the Boiler Department as a regular Government Department, and this means that the deficit in working this Department will be met from the general revenue. It is unanimously believed that it is not possible to raise the Boiler Inspection fees beyond the present scale, and, I am afraid, chances of this Department ever being safe-supporting are remote. I personally think that legislation in future should be in the direction indicated by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce in 1876 in the extracts just read by me, a direction which will ensure considerable reduction in the cost of upkeep of the Department.

In September 1873, on the second reading of the Boiler Inspection Bill (No. 7) of 1873, subsequently Act V of 1873, the Honourable Mr. BYTHELL said——

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I rise to a point of order. Is this not irrelevant to the motion of the second reading of the Bill?

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Member can speak on the general principles of the Bill on second reading.

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS (continuing):—My Lord,—Speaking on the Bill before the then Council the Honourable Mr. BYTHELL dwelt at great length on the risks to which the industry would be exposed by what he called unscrupulous inspectors of boilers. Now, the inconveniences to trade and temptations to inspectors, mentioned by Mr. BYTHELL in 1873, still exist but the factory owners have accommodated themselves to the existing circumstances admirably. I would, however, like to express my gratification at the very sensible and sympathetic manner in which Mr. MACKINTOSH, the Chief Inspector of Boiler Department, has been working his Department since his appointment with as much consideration for the convenience of boiler owners as permissible under the Act. But there are bound to be harrassments similar to those mentioned by Mr. BYTHELL, which do not come to his knowledge. Until, however, Government decide to look at their responsibility regarding the inspection of boilers on those lines, I would like to bring to the notice of Government a few of the hardships at present experienced by a few gin and press owners.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I rise to a point of order. The Honourable Member is not dealing with the general principles of the Bill but he is dealing with facts and grievances.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Member is entitled to deal with the general principles of the Bill but he should not go into details.

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS:—Does Your Excellency rule that I am not entitled to go into details on the clauses?

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Member can go on with his speech.

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS (continuing):—I have never been able to understand why there should not be one uniform Act for Inspection of Boilers all over India. At present various Presidencies have their own Boiler Inspection Acts and these, together with their departmental rules, vary rather considerably. The rules regarding admeasurements and quantities to be used in determining the nominal horse power of boilers, for instance, differ in some instances widely and are a cause of lasting worry to gin and press owners. I hope, Sir Thomas Holland's Commission will pronounce a definite opinion in this matter, favourable to factory owners.

Sub-section B of section 32——

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I think really the Honourable Member is going into details of the Bill on sections and sub-sections. I only want to hear him on the general principles.

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS:—In view of Your Excellency's ruling I have nothing more to say than what I have said already and I support the second reading of the Bill.

The Honourable Sir DINSHAW MONOCKJI PETIT:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the Bill. It is a matter of great gratification that on a Bill which at one time appeared as though it would cause a lot of difference of opinion there has been a unanimous report of the Select Committee to which it was referred and this is due to a great extent to the fair spirit and the open mind with which the discussions were carried out both by the officials and non-officials who were members of that Committee. Representing the Mill-owners' Association, my Lord, the body which is very much concerned with the working of this Bill in the City of Bombay, it gives me great pleasure to express my satisfaction at the manner in which the discussion was carried out in the Select Committee and also on the result that the clauses which were considered obnoxious by the Association have been dropped and some of the objections have been provided for in the body of the Bill. I therefore have great pleasure in supporting it.

The Honourable Mr. G. H. THISELTON DYER:—Your Excellency,—I think it is a matter for congratulation that so much progress has been made in this Presidency that the clauses dealing with the inspection of prime-movers can now be cut out.

BOILERS BILL.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. G. H. Thiselton Dyer; Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani; Mr. Curtis; the President.]

I am glad to think also that the time has now arrived when some modifications might be introduced in the qualifications for certificated engineers in charge of boilers of various powers when the rules made under this Act are considered.

I do not know whether it is permissible to speak on the subject of such rules, but as they are possibly among the most important provisions in the Act I may express a hope that as these rules deal with very technical matters—matters which pertain to the interests of so many different people, trades and professions—it might be possible for Government to consider the appointment of a small committee to finally revise them, either before they are published in the Gazette or soon after publication. With these words I beg to support the second reading.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—As our discussion is now limited to only general principles I will only say a few words. The tendency of this legislation, as my Honourable friend has said, should be in the direction of consulting the convenience of factory owners in up-country and I am glad that the object has been kept in view by the Select Committee in the amendments already made by them. There are, however, a few more provisions which I think require to be amended and I have sent amendments with reference to these and they will be dealt with fully when I move those amendments. With these few remarks I beg to support the second reading.

Bill read clause by clause.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—I now move, Sir, that the Bill be read clause by clause.

Clauses 1 and 2 were then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Clause 3. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—My Lord,—The amendment which I have to move to clause 3 runs as follows:—

"(c) When the Boiler is hired or obtained on loan from the owner by any person using the same he and not the owner shall be liable for acts done and liabilities incurred by him under the Act while the boiler is in his charge."

My Lord, what I wish to submit is that the responsibility under the Act should rest with only the owner for the time being. It should not be the owner who owns the boiler but the man who is in charge of the boiler as owner for the time being that should be responsible for the boiler. The original owner, in my opinion, should not continue to be liable when he has lent or let on hire the boiler to another person and is not himself in charge of it. If he is held liable for the acts of his own agent over whom he has control it would not be very hard, but when he has let or lent the boiler to another person over whom he has no immediate control his own responsibility should cease and the man in actual charge though he be only the temporary owner should alone be liable as owner for the time being. Under the Act as it stands "owner" includes "agent," but under the Bill it is proposed to include in that term also the person to whom the boiler is let or lent; well, the owner may be held liable for acts of his agent as he has control over him and continues himself to be the owner, though even in that case the liability ought strictly speaking to be confined only to the agent himself, but with reference to the acts of the man who has hired or obtained the boiler on loan there is no reason to hold the owner liable and I think the liability should in that case be only on the person who has so hired or borrowed and not on the owner when he has ceased to be in charge of the boiler and has no control over the person in actual charge.

That is the object of my amendment, my Lord.

[Mr. Ghulam Muhammad walad Khan Bahadur Wali Muhammad Bhurgri; the President; Mr. Upasani; Mr. Siddhanath Dhonddev Garud; Mr. Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh.] [14TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. GHULAM MUHAMMAD, walad KHAN BAHADUR WALI MUHAMMAD BHURGRI:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the amendment moved by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI. It is very rarely in cities and big towns that anybody lets his boiler on hire. But in the mofussil such cases do occur. I think that if the present clause 3 (b) is amended by omitting the word "also" in the section as it stands and substituting the word "or" for "and" the purpose for which the Honourable Mr. UPASANI brought forward his amendment will be served. With these words, Sir, I support the amendment.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I think it would be convenient if the Honourable Member could get the Honourable Mr. UPASANI to agree to his view. Will the Honourable Mr. UPASANI accept the suggestion?

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI:—Yes, my Lord, I accept the suggestion.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I understand the Honourable Member is willing instead of moving his original amendment to move this one that sub-clause (b) of clause 3 should read as follows:—

"'Owner' includes any person using a boiler as agent of the owner thereof or any person using a boiler which he has hired or obtained on loan from the owner thereof"; and in that case what he proposes under sub-section (c) is withdrawn, I suppose.

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI:—Yes, my Lord.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Honourable Members will understand that the amendment now merely becomes the alteration of sub-section (b) of clause 3.

The Honourable Mr. SIDDHANATH DHONDDEV GARUD:—Your Excellency,—I beg to accord my support to the amendment which has been proposed by the Honourable Mr. BHURGRI. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI'S amendment aimed at making the hirer and the person who obtained the boiler on loan liable for his acts when he was in charge of that boiler. The definition of the word 'owner' was widened in the Select Committee to include the hirer and the person who took the boiler on loan from the owner. They were included in this definition to make them liable for their acts when they were in charge of the boiler for which ordinarily the owner would have been liable. I think this amendment, though it does not go quite so far as the original amendment suggested by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI, would still, I think, be useful in practice in making the person in immediate charge of the boiler responsible for his acts when he was in charge of the boiler.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH:—May it please Your Excellency,—In my opinion neither the original amendment proposed by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI nor the amended one will meet the intention of either of my Honourable friends. I understand that their object is that in case the owner has nothing whatever to do with the use of the boiler and has given it on hire he ought not to remain responsible. That I understand to be their intention, and in certain cases I think it would be but justice that the owner should not be responsible. But looking to the clause as it would be after either of the amendments, I submit that that intention is not at all carried out. The section says:—"Owner includes also any person using a boiler as agent of the owner thereof and any person using a boiler which he has hired or obtained on loan from the owner thereof." That is, the owner himself is not at all excluded from responsibility and the owner being not excluded from the definition he would remain liable notwithstanding the amendments that are proposed and I therefore submit that there should be an alteration in some other direction in order that the intention may be carried out, and I suggest that the amendment should be in this direction. "Owner includes——"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. I cannot allow any more amendments as I think I have gone a long way already.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I think, perhaps it will be convenient if first of all I take the original amendment proposed by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI and withdrawn by him.

Sub-clause (b) of clause 3 in the original Bill ran as follows:—"Owner includes any agent or hirer using any boiler."

When the Select Committee went through that clause they thought the English was bad and was very indefinite and they also noticed that no provision was made for the borrower. They accordingly turned to the Central Provinces Act of 1907 and took the present definition from that Act which runs as follows:—"Owner includes also any person using a boiler as an agent of the owner thereof and any person using a boiler which he has hired or obtained on loan from the owner thereof." I must say it does not take the original definition very much further except in cases where the boiler has been borrowed.

On that clause (b) the Honourable Mr. UPASANI originally proposed an amendment like this:—"After clause 3 (b) add the following:—(c) When the boiler is hired or obtained on loan from the owner by any person using the same he and not the owner shall be liable for acts done and liabilities incurred by him under the Act while the boiler is in his charge."

Now, Sir, that amendment has been withdrawn and the Honourable Mr. BHURGRI, with Honourable Mr. UPASANI'S consent, has proposed another. The effect of this amendment is to omit in line 2 the word "also" and to substitute the word "or" for the word "and."

Well, Sir, honestly and frankly, so far as Government are concerned, our view is that it makes no difference whatever and the binding effect of the clause as originally provided by the Select Committee will remain the same.

I will now proceed to explain why it is necessary to keep the double penalty. Honourable Members will turn to sub-clause (1) of clause 8 of the Bill. It reads thus:—"The owner of any boiler who desires to use the same shall, if it is unregistered, cause it to be registered." That is the basis of all the operations of the Boiler Department; that is to say, the list of boilers, their numbers and the names of their owners.

Now, Sir, I think, Honourable Members will see why it is important that that list should always show the real owners. Honourable Members are probably familiar with the problem of motor-cars. Owners of motor-cars all have their numbers and the list of the owners of motor-cars is published in the "Times of India Calendar" and other books of public reference. Therefore, if any accident happens, the injured person can take note of the number and report it to the police and he finds at once who the owner is. It is possible that the owner can say "I keep that car for hire and I have leased it out to somebody else. It will then be for the Court to decide whether he has been able to shift the liability or not. But the original register must show who is the proprietor of the car. Now, the Collector of Bombay keeps a register of the whole of the boilers in the Bombay Presidency proper in the same way as the Commissioner of Police in Bombay keeps a register of the whole of the motor-cars in the Bombay Presidency. That list must be kept upto date to show who is responsible in the first instance for boilers. Later, clause 9 of the Bill may apply to owner or it may apply according to the circumstances to the lessor. This point was considered in the Select Committee and we had occasion to inquire what were the statistics of prosecutions under the Act with reference to owners and lessors and whether it was really necessary to go into any great niceties of drafting in reference to this particular clause; and I find from the figures supplied that in 1911-12 the total number of boilers was 2,067: there was one prosecution and no conviction. In 1912-13 the number of boilers was 2,176: no prosecutions, no conviction. In 1913-14 the number of boilers was 2,268 and there were 2 prosecutions and 2 convictions. In 1914-15 the number of boilers registered was 2,253: 2 prosecutions and 2 convictions; and in 1915-16 the number of boilers was 2,009: no prosecutions; no convictions.

Well, Sir, the general conclusion that the Select Committee came to was that the wording of this sub-clause (b) required the amendment which they have suggested. I think, Sir, that having regard to the fact that sub-clause (b) has been in force now for 26 years in regard to the definition of owner, agent or hirer, and that no trouble has ensued from the form of the clause, I think, we may assume that the persons or Courts trying the cases exercise their common sense and where the owner can shift the liability on to the lessee the Court will refrain from convicting him. At any rate, there is no record as far as we know of any complaints whatever in regard to the unsatisfactory working of this clause.

I would, therefore, urge that the amendment moved by the Honourable Mr. BHURGRI and supported by the Honourable Mr. UPASANI for the omission of the word "also" and substitution of the word "or" for "and" should be negatived.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost.

Clauses 3 to 8 were then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Clause 9. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—The amendment which I have suggested is as follows:—

"At the end of clause 9 (1) add the words 'of the section'."

My Lord, with reference to this amendment——

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—With reference to this amendment I may at once say that the Honourable Member wishes to add the words "of the section" at the end of clause 9 (1). But the addition is unnecessary under the General Clauses Act. If the Council will turn to the General Clauses Act, section 91, the Council will see that the draft amendment is unnecessary.

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—In that case I will withdraw that amendment.

Amendment was by leave withdrawn.

Clauses 9 to 15 were then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the President:—Clause 16. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—May it please Your Excellency,—Clause 16 (1) runs thus:—"If the commission is of opinion that the appeal is unfounded or frivolous, it may award any sum not exceeding one hundred and fifty rupees to be paid by the owner as costs."

My amendment is to omit the words "unfounded or."

My reasons for that omission are these. If the appeal succeeds the owner is not to get any compensation. But if the appeal fails the owner is placed at a disadvantage in having to pay a penalty. It should be remembered that the appeal of the owner is to be not only against the order of the inspector refusing to give a certificate to the owner of the boiler but also against his orders with regard to the other matters referred to in the section. It has also to be borne in mind that the owners in the mofussil have to file their appeals on the advice which they get there. If the owner desires to consult some people in the towns they ought to have time to do it. If the owner wishes to appeal he ought to be allowed an opportunity for freely doing it and there ought to be nothing in the statute to discourage him in any way from seeking redress. The operation of this section should, therefore, be limited to only those cases where the appeal is altogether frivolous. This is the main purpose of my amendment.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—May it please your Excellency,—The Honourable Member desires to change the wording of the clause that has been in existence for the last 26 years. The wording of the clause is: "If the commission is of opinion that the appeal is unfounded or frivolous, it may award any sum not exceeding one hundred and fifty rupees to be paid by the owner as costs."

It is rather hard to define exactly in what circumstances the appeal would be unfounded and when it would be frivolous and when not frivolous. But I think it is desirable that the expression should be as inclusive as possible, and I am not aware that any fault has been found with the original wording of the section as rendering cases liable to punishment which ought not to be punished.

I think experience has shown that no hardship has been done by the present clause. The Honourable Member has narrated no facts so far as I am aware and it is only his individual opinion that this wording is unhappy and I think, Sir, that we should as far as possible stick to phrases which have satisfied the users of boilers for a generation.

I, therefore, suggest that this amendment should be negatived.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—Unfortunately I am not in a position to state the cases because they are not reported. But I think in making this amendment we have to look to the statute as it stands. If the statute is in any way likely to cause injustice or hardship we ought to avoid that contingency and there should be some safeguard. Therefore, I think that it is necessary that we should leave no room for doubt. As the wording of the clause stands it might cause hardship in some cases where there may be difference of opinion.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Clause 16 (2). The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—The amendment that I propose reads thus:—

Clause 16 (2).—Omit the words "as an arrear of Land Revenue" and substitute "as a debt by attachment and sale of his moveable property".

What I desire is that these amounts which are due for fees or penalty should not be put on the same level as arrears due on account of assessment. There are special provisions for arrears under the Land Revenue Code. That is the reason why I have moved this amendment.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—Once more I call attention to the fact that under the existing law, section 13, sub-section (2), which is identically the same with clause 16 (2), and which has been in force for six and twenty years, there has been, as far as I am aware, no complaint which has come up with regard to the method of recovery of arrears of revenue. The expression " as an arrear of land-revenue " is one which is in ordinary use in many Acts of this presidency and elsewhere.

The procedure which the Honourable Member proposes to substitute is " as a debt by attachment and sale of his moveable property ". I am not clear whether it is under the Civil Procedure Code, Land Revenue Code or what. It is usual to recover arrears of Government as land-revenue and the procedure is perfectly well known and I think, Sir, it should be continued.

With these words I ask that this amendment be negatived.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost.

Clauses 16 and 17 were then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—Clause 18 (1).

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI :—Your Excellency,—In this clause I have suggested to " Add the words ' at the time ' in line 6 after the words ' being used ' ".

In this clause power is now being given to the inspector to enter a factory building at any time. Under the Act as it stands he is allowed to enter only from morning to sunset and only also to inspect boilers for which certificates have been obtained. Now it is proposed to allow him to enter at any hour and even to inspect boilers for which certificates have not been obtained. Well, in that case I think there should be some safeguard to show that the inspector had reason to believe that the boiler was being used " at the time " especially if he propose to enter at an unusual hour. If the boiler is working at night you may allow him to enter but if it is not worked at night there is no reason to let him enter after sunset.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—It seems to me that the addition proposed by the Honourable Member is either superfluous or else it contradicts with the rest of the section. The clause says " it shall be lawful for an inspector at any time—those are the words—to enter any place or building, in which he has reason to believe that a boiler is being used ". The wording as given in the amendment is entirely superfluous and I submit, Sir, that the amendment should be negatived.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost.

Clauses 18 to 28 were then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—Clause 29. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI :—My amendment to clause 29, my Lord, runs as follows :—

" Omit the words ' without fault on his part ' in line 5 ".

Well, this provision refers only to the duplicate certificates that are to be given in case the original is lost. I do not know why it is necessary to restrict the grant of the duplicate to only cases where the loss has been " without fault on his part ". Whenever there is an actual loss of the certificate the Engineer should get a copy of it if he pays the requisite fee for it. It is immaterial whether the loss was due to his fault or was accidental and it is not necessary to go into the question as to how far he was at fault for the loss; so the words " without fault on his part " appear to me to be unnecessary. He must be given a duplicate whenever he loses it, on the payment of fees to the authorities of the institution where he qualified himself for the certificate.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL :—I do not know what cases are proposed to be met by the words " without fault on his part ". If there are any cases which Government have in view, well, I shall not support the Honourable Mr. UPASANI's amendment. But as it is I do not see why a man who loses a certificate should not be entitled to get another on payment of fees. Presumably it seems to me that Mr. UPASANI'S amendment is perfectly justified Unless we hear to the contrary from the Honourable Mr. CURTIS I think the Council should support the amendment of the Honourable Mr. UPASANI. If a man loses his certificate let him have another on payment of fixed charges. Why ask him to prove that the loss is without any fault on his part. However, I should like to hear the Honourable Mr. CURTIS on the point.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I might explain that the matter of production of certificate cannot be considered entirely from the owner's point of view. I understand in practice the holders of third class certificates very often trade out their certificates. The third class engineers have not very often a very high standard of morality and they hire out their certificates to other people who are anxious to go upcountry and get a two months job. Therefore, the practice in the Collector's office is, when these people come and ask for a duplicate, first of all, an advertisement is put in the papers saying that such and such a certificate has been lost and then a summary enquiry is held by the Collector as to the circumstances under which the certificate has been lost. In cases where the man shows reasonable grounds such as that the certificate was burnt perhaps in the boiler or perhaps it had been spoiled by oil and coal dust, then a fresh certificate is granted. The words "without fault on his part" are merely meant to indicate that the supply of copies of existing certificates will not be granted as a matter of course. The words in question to which the Honourable Mr. UPASANI takes exception like so many others have been in force under the Act for the last 26 years and as far as is known there have been no complaints arising from them. I trust that with this explanation the Council will allow the wording of the section to remain as it is at present drafted.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—I have not been able to follow my honourable friend and I think he has not given us any satisfactory reasons as to why he insists on those words being retained. If a man has qualified himself and happens to lose his certificate and wants another I don't see any reason why he should not be granted a duplicate. I think there should be only one condition, viz., that he should satisfy the authorities that he has really lost the certificate and if he satisfies as regards that fact, then I submit he must be given a fresh certificate without any inquiry as to whether the loss was due to his fault or otherwise. Any inquiry in that direction is I think irrelevant and may only entail a waste of public time and money. When there is satisfactory evidence of the loss I do not think that any man should be refused a copy of the certificate when he has qualified himself to hold it. Therefore, I say that these words are unnecessary and must be deleted.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost with 6 members voting for and 36 against it.

BOILERS BILL.

[14TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani; the President; Mr. G. S. Curtis.]

Ayes. Noes.

The Honourable Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas.
The Honourable Mr. G. H. Thiselton-Dyer, A.M I.C.E.
The Honourable Dulabawa Raisingji, Thakor of Kerwada.

Clauses 29 to 38 were then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Clause 39. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—My Lord,—I beg leave to withdraw my amendment:—

Omit the words "as an arrear of land-revenue" and substitute "as a debt due by attachment and sale of his moveable property".

Amendment was then by leave withdrawn.

Clauses 39 and 40 were then put to the vote and carried.

Schedule A was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Schedule B. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—With reference to this Schedule, your Excellency, my amendment is as follows:—

"In paragraph 3 after the words 'a second fee' add 'of Rs. 10'".

"In the same Schedule omit the last paragraph 'providing for levy of double fee.'"

My Lord, the fee for inspection now has been increased and ranges from Rs. 20 to Rs. 50. What I propose is that an additional fee of only Rs. 10 should be charged when a second visit is necessary. If the work is not finished, then you might charge more fee but it should be only Rs. 10 and not a second fee of Rs. 20 to 50. Therefore, the words I have proposed in my amendment should be added after the words "second fee."

In the last clause it is stated that "a double fee will be leviable for the inspection of a boiler that is not situate in a place for "which an inspector has been expressly appointed by the Governor in Council, if the owner or person in charge, after due notification, fails to avail himself of the services of the inspector during the usual periods for visiting the district." This period, my Lord, will no doubt be fixed by Government with due regard to the convenience of the factory owners but without their having any voice in the matter, and some latitude is required for those people who may have to make these applications at a time which might be either before or after the time specified by Government. There will be cases in which there will be no need to pay a double fee and an additional fee of Rs. 10 would be quite sufficient. I, therefore, propose my amendment and hope it will be accepted by the Council.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—May it please your Excellency,—I submit to this Council that the provisions of this Schedule are eminently moderate and in the public interests necessary. One provision to which the Honourable Member has taken exception is as follows:—

"A second fee will be leviable for re-inspection in any case where the inspection of a boiler is begun, but, owing to the fault or neglect of the owner or person in charge, is not completed within a period of six months from the date of commencement of inspection."

The practical effect of it is this, that an Inspector starts to open a boiler and he goes the next day but finds the owner has gone away and locked the door. He cannot continue his inspection. The door remains locked for six months and is then opened. What the Schedule says is that he should pay a second fee in such cases. I submit, Sir, that is reasonable.

BOILERS BILL.

[The President; Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani; Mr. G. S. Curtis.] [14TH MARCH 1917.]

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Does the Honourable Member (Mr. UPASANI) want to reply?

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI:—I do not want to reply, your Excellency. I have already said what I wanted to say and I have spoken on both the amendments.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I cannot allow the Honourable Member to move both the amendments at once. He must take them one by one.

The first amendment was then put to the vote and lost.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Member may now move his second amendment.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—In regard to my second amendment, My Lord, I have already said that it would be a great hardship to pay a double fee. Instead of that, it would be better if Government could see its way to reduce the amount. People in the mofussil do not always know the dates fixed by Government. There are Marwaris and other people who do not generally understand the rules and do not read the Gazettes in which these publications are made, and, therefore, it will be in their interests if my amendment is accepted.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—May it please your Excellency,—My answer to the Honourable Member's amendment in regard to this particular provision is that it is eminently necessary in the public interests. As no doubt members of this Council are aware, the season for the inspection of these boilers falls practically for three or four months in the year—September, October and November. The inspector has to travel over a large area and it is absolutely necessary that when he does visit a place that all the boilers in the vicinity should be presented for inspection. Particular care is always taken to notify the visit of the inspector, and when that fact is notified, it is necessary that every possible inducement should be given to the owners of boilers to let the inspector know that they have their boilers ready for inspection. It has been mentioned by several speakers that the boiler fund involves a loss on the State funds. It need hardly be observed that the most economical arrangement for the boiler inspection is that the inspector should be able to see all the boilers when he visits a certain place. For instance, it should not be necessary for him to go to East Khandesh, then go to Surat for inspecting one boiler 30 miles from the station and then come back again to West Khandesh Such a course would pile up expenditure. It is much better that every possible provision should be made to see that all work in a certain locality will be inspected by one man at one time. Therefore I move that this provision be maintained.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost.

Schedule B was put to the vote and carried.

The preamble was put to the vote and carried.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS moves the Third Reading of the Bill

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—I now move, Sir, that the Bill be read a third time and passed into law.

Bill read a third time.

The motion for third reading was put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I think it will perhaps be to the convenience of the Council if we adjourn now till half-past eleven to-morrow morning.

The Council then adjourned till 11-30 a.m. on Thursday the 15th March 1917.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. A Bill to provide for increasing the number of elective members on district local boards and other matters. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—In conformity with section 80 of the Government of India Act, 1915, and with Your Excellency's permission I move that this Bill be shelved.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I do not quite understand the Honourable Member's point. Would he kindly explain the matter further?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—My Lord,—I desire to move that this Bill be entirely shelved. I do not want the Council to go on with the discussion of this Bill.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Then I would suggest to the Honourable Member that he should oppose the first reading and if he gets a majority he will succeed in his object.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I want Your Excellency's clear ruling whether I can move that this Bill be shelved.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—What I want to get quite clearly from the Honourable Member is this: he refers me to section 80 of the Government of India Act, 1915. I want to know the particular portion in that particular section of the Act that gives the Honourable Member the right he suggests.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency,—Clause 1 of section 80 of the Government of India Act provides:—

"At a meeting of a local legislative council no motion shall be entertained other than a motion for leave to introduce a measure into the Council for the purpose of enactment, or having reference to a measure introduced or proposed to be introduced into the Council for that purpose, etc."

Under this clause I move that the Bill be shelved, and I want Your Excellency's ruling whether this motion of mine is in order.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Under rule 7 of the rules for conduct of Council Business I rule that the Honourable Mr. PATEL's motion is a direct negative of the Honourable Mr. CURTIS' motion for the first reading of the Bill and I therefore rule it out of order. The Honourable Member must conform to the ordinary procedure of the Council. I do not want any discussion on the point whether this Bill should be shelved.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I then move under rule 7 of the rules for conduct of Council Business that the consideration of the Bill be postponed.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. The Honourable Member must make his speech after the Honourable Mover in charge of the Bill moves the first reading of the Bill. I cannot allow any discussion before the first reading of the Bill is moved.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency,—My present motion is under rule 7 of the rules for the conduct of Council Business and I desire to move that the Council do pass to the consideration of the business next in order in the list of business.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Do I understand the Honourable Member to say that he wishes to bring his motion under rule 7 of the rules of business?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Yes, Your Excellency,—I beg to move under that rule that the Council do pass to the consideration of the business next in order.

Your Excellency,—It is my misfortune that at this very session of the Council I have to bring forward this second extraordinary motion. I am thoroughly convinced, my Lord, that the interests of local self-government demand that this motion should be placed for the consideration of this Council. The Bill before the Council, Your Excellency will see, proposes to give to district local boards an elective majority.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I should like to inquire from the Honourable Member if he proposes on this motion of his to discuss the merits of this particular measure which my Honourable colleague is going to move the first reading of?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—In giving my reasons why this motion should commend itself to this Council I must place before the Council the reasons why I consider this measure an obnoxious one.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I am bound to say that in order not to waste the time of the Council I cannot allow the Honourable Member to go into general details. But I see no healthy object in the Honourable Member making a long speech on the main principles of the measure.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency,—The question of local self-government so far as this Presidency is concerned is full of disappointment for the people. It consists of chapter and verse of hopes held out but frustrated, of promises made but ignored or lost sight of and of pledges given but not redeemed. Your Excellency, local self-government as applied to rural areas was started in this Presidency in the year 1863 by Sir Bartle Frere as a result of——

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. I want to know what are the specific reasons the Honourable Member wants to put forward for the adjournment of the debate on the first reading of this Bill.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I hold that this is a retrograde and obnoxious measure and should not be proceeded with.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I think the Honourable Member can safely say that on the first reading. I want to know why he is so anxious to pass to the next business of the day and put forward his motion for adjournment. I want the Honourable Member's specific reasons.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I do not want this Council to consider the first reading of this Bill at all and my reasons are briefly these.

In the first place I may bring to Your Excellency's notice the fact that Sir Bartle Frere laid it down distinctly when local self-government was started that its success would depend on the degree of——

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. I cannot allow the Honourable Member to discuss the Bill that is coming forward. I cannot allow the Honourable Member to discuss the general terms of local self-government. That will be done if Government is defeated on the Honourable Member's motion. Indeed, he has told us very clearly that the reason for his motion for adjournment is that he does not like the Bill at all. I have suggested to him already that the best means for him to take would be to oppose the motion for the first reading of the Bill in the ordinary way. He has thought fit to move this adjournment and he has stated quite clearly in a few words his reasons, but I cannot allow him to go into a long dissertation on local self-government or district local boards at all.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I do not know how I should support my motion if I am not allowed to discuss the merits of the Bill. Your Excellency is right in observing that I do not like the Bill at all; but I must be allowed to say why I do not like it. Of course, I shall be brief. I shall not go into a long dissertation on local self-government.

There are in this Presidency as many as 241 local boards.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. I do urge upon my Honourable friend very strongly indeed that he is not only wasting the time of the Council, but he is taking an entirely wrong step in this matter which makes it extremely difficult for me to deal with the situation. It is quite obvious—I should like to have a sense of the Council on this point—that if he disapproves of this particular measure, the ordinary parliamentary procedure, the ordinary procedure in any Council, would be that my Honourable colleague who moves this Bill will state his views and the Honourable Member will oppose this Bill on first reading, and the Council will say aye or no as the case may be. This motion for adjournment is a purely dilatory proceeding in every possible way.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—What course then am I asked to pursue? I assure the Council that I am doing all this in the best interests of local self-government. It is a pity Your Excellency thinks I am wasting the time of the Council.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—What I venture to suggest—I really think I am consulting the best interests of the Council in this matter—is to allow my Honourable colleague to move the first reading of the Bill and my Honourable friend will then have every opportunity to oppose it at such length as he pleases and when the division arises either he will be successful or Government will be successful.

LOCAL BOARDS BILL.

[15TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; Mr. G. S. Curtis.]

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Very well, my Lord, I have to bow to Your Excellency's ruling.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—May it please Your Excellency,—I rise to propose the first reading of the Bill to amend the Bombay Local Boards Act, 1884.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS moves the first reading of the Bill.

In their report on the question of the extension of the principles of local self-government the Committee presided over by the Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE recommended as regards district local boards or as they termed them district councils:—

(1) that the proportion of elected members should not be less than two-thirds of the whole,

(2) that the remainder of the members shall be nominated, provided that the number of nominated officials shall not exceed one-sixth of the whole board,

(3) not less than one-half of the persons elected shall be elected by territorial constituencies including the more important municipalities or a group of minor municipalities,

(4) the remainder of the persons should be elected by special constituencies.

In paragraph 13 they proceeded to give instances of the special constituencies whose creation they suggested. They added that certain hostile critics anticipated difficulties, but that they considered it sufficient to point to the system of special elections in force in other provinces as justifying their suggestion. So much for the recommendations as regards the district boards or as the Committee termed them district councils.

On receipt of the Committee's report—I may mention that the Honourable Member who has just spoken was a member of the Committee—Government decided that steps should be taken to give effect to the main recommendations with reference to district councils as speedily as possible and Government have accordingly directed by executive order under section 5 of the Act with reference to all such boards whose term of office has expired under section 14 that the number of nominated members shall be reduced That process was begun in May and June last and has been steadily continued. At the present moment there are still four* boards whose terms of office do not expire for some considerable time. For the sake of uniformity and to ensure that all boards shall start a new term of office on the same footing it is necessary to suspend the provisions of section 14 of the original Act. Hence clause 3 of the present Bill.

*Kaira, 30th September 1917
Broach, 30th April 1917.
Poona, 31st October 1917.
Ratnagiri, 31st December 1917.

But, Sir, a suspension of the term of office is not the only matter with regard to which immediate legislation is necessary. It is obvious that with the substantial reduction in the number of nominated members and the increase in the importance and influence of the elected element it is imperatively necessary that the constituencies who are to elect the members should be re-modelled. In certain cases electorates, for instance large land owners, talukdars, khots and so forth, not being inamdars within the meaning of section 10 of the Act, the Mahomedan community and others, have been accustomed to rely on nomination as a means of securing representation on the boards, which representation by the reduction in the number of nominated members will now be largely diminished or withdrawn. Accordingly it is necessary to take steps at once to reform the electorates in order to give all interests a chance of being adequately represented.

Having regard, however, to the fact that the electorate will differ largely in various districts (in some, for instance, associations such as those mentioned by the Committee, namely, notified areas, sanitary committees, district sanitary associations, co-operative societies and so forth have attained considerable importance, in others they have not: in some there are special classes such as khots and talukdars who are to be provided for, in others there are not: in some there are special classes of population, such as Mahomedans, whose interests have to be considered and in others there are not) it will be impossible to lay down specifically in the body of the Act what the constitution of the electorates will be. Consequently the Committee came to the conclusion, with which I think the Honourable Mr. PATEL disagreed, that as regards Mahomedans only it would be impossible to lay down by statute——

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Not 'only'.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS (continuing):—I beg the Honourable Member's pardon. There was one other, I think. The Committee, subject to the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S minute of dissent, came to the conclusion that it would be impossible to stereotype by statute for every district in the Presidency what the electorate should be. Accordingly they recommended that power should be taken for Government to prescribe by rules what the electorate should be in every district. Hence clause 3A of Schedule, Part I. The rules framed under this clause will be drawn up by the local authorities in consultation with local opinion. They will be published for general criticism before final sanction is accorded.

That, Sir, is the scope of the Bill roughly. Suspension of section 14 and taking of legal power to form new electorates under section 7 in lieu of those prescribed by the existing Act, section 7.

It may perhaps be asked why no steps have been taken to deal with many other thorny questions which arise out of the Local Boards Act. In the first place, as regards the question of control; I mention that because the Honourable Member has already referred to it. That has already adequately been provided for by the existing Act and Government have shown by the discussion on the budget yesterday that they are prepared to appoint at once from the 1st of April non-official Presidents for five local boards. Not only are they prepared to appoint those gentlemen, but they have agreed at considerable expense to provincial revenues to provide for funds that were necessary for the equipment of those non-official gentlemen with adequate office staff. As Honourable Members who may have read the budget yesterday will remember, a sum of Rs. 30,000 has been provided for in the budget for the five local boards where these Presidents are to be appointed, and that sum will be increased as time goes on when experience has been gained and suitable gentlemen of position come forward. There are 19 boards in the Presidency proper: so it will be at once apparent to Honourable Members that the expenditure involved is no mere trifle.

A further question will be asked—I am anticipating the objection—as to why this Bill does not deal with the still more thorny question of taluka local boards and panchayats. The answer to that is simple. The task of dealing with these bodies is proving a difficult one. There are certain fundamental questions which require solution before a new law can be framed. For instance, whether taluka local boards or panchayats should exist side by side and whether, as in Madras, the panchayats should be affiliated to the local boards: whether the panchayats should be formed in a single village or groups of villages: whether in certain cases the taluka local boards should be dispensed with and their place taken by Committees of district councils and, above all, how funds are to be provided and how the financial relations of these bodies are to be regulated: On these points, though as regards panchayats the question is not specifically referred to the Committee, the Committee have made remarks which disclose a very marked difference of opinion.

Moreover, the question of finance is extremely difficult to solve under the present conditions. The Committee practically came round to the conclusion that a substantial portion of the funds to be disbursed by the various local bodies must be obtained by grants-in-aid from the public treasury. In the present state of war and uncertainty as regards the future of provincial finance, it is practically impossible to estimate what subventions will be forthcoming. In any case the legal problem itself is one of extreme difficulty and Government have accordingly decided that further inquiry is necessary. They have recently appointed an officer who was a member of the Committee presided over by the Hon'ble Mr. LAWRENCE to study the whole subject and on receipt of his report they propose to proceed further with the amendment of the law. In the meantime, however, for the reasons given above, the present Bill has been introduced with the object of ratifying the action which has already been taken by an executive order, further for broadening the basis of the franchise and curing the defects inherent in the existing section 7.

Before going further I may refer to section 7 of the existing Act. It says :—

"The elective members of district local boards shall be as follows :—

(a) One member or, if Government so direct, two or more members for each taluka local board in the district, or one member for two or more taluka local boards in the district, united for this purpose into a joint board, elected by the members of such board or joint board from amongst their own number ;

(b) one member for each municipal district within the district containing not less than eighteen thousand inhabitants, elected by the commissioners of such district from among their own number ;

(c) one member elected by the holders of entire alienated villages, if any, within the district, from amongst their own number, or if there is but one such holder in the district, such holder himself, or any person whom he nominates as his representative."

Then follows the proviso.

Now, Sir, it will not need many remarks from me, I think, to convince the representatives of the local boards that these electorates are not at present very satisfactory. As regards municipalities, the limit of 18,000 population is in many cases far too high. In some districts it results in the local municipalities having no representative at all. For instance, Ratnagiri. Further, the definition in clause 7 (c) of "holders of entire alienated villages" rules out the khots, talukdars and may rule out a large and influential class of land-owners. Further, the section as it stands omits altogether any provision for the classes referred to in paragraph 14 of Mr. Lawrence's Committee's report. The Committee suggested that special constituencies might be represented as follows :—inamdars, 2 ; persons holding degrees and diplomas of the University, barristers and pleaders, 2 ; title-holders and honorary magistrates, 2 ; recognized associations, such as the Co-operative Credit Societies, District Sanitary Association, District Agricultural Association, 3 ; the Mahomedan community, 2 : total 11. As I have already indicated, these special constituencies must vary according to the circumstances existing in that district ; and accordingly power has been taken to prescribe by rules what these constituencies shall be for each district. The prescribing of rules will only be made as far as possible after full consultation of the local public opinion.

I am perfectly conscious that the measure is only an ad interim one. But, Sir, at any rate, it least deserves the description given to it that it is a retrograde measure. Nothing would have been easier for Government than to wait until they have legal power for giving effect to the most important recommendations of Mr. Lawrence's Committee with reference to the increase in the elective element on these district councils to two-thirds. Government did not take that action. I think that within something like six weeks of the Committee's report being received action was taken first of all with reference to the first board and it was consistently persevered with with regard to the other boards as their period came to an end.

With reference to the recommendation of the Committee about official control, Government have shown by the appointments which are to take effect from the 1st of April next that they are perfectly willing, in places and on occasions where suitable holders for the offices are forthcoming and subject to the provision of requisite funds, to appoint non-official gentlemen to hold the important posts of Presidents of these local boards.

But as regards the frame-work of local self-government, whether the foundation should be the panchayat or the notified area, and above all the financial measures necessary to establish this frame work on a satisfactory footing, Government are of opinion after careful consideration that some time must elapse before a more elaborate measure can be framed and presented to this Council. In the meantime the present measure will furnish a useful opportunity for experiment, for testing public opinion and for, above all, arousing greater local interest in the elections for these district councils, an interest which, I think, there is only too much reason to think has not been as keen as is desirable.

With these remarks I move the first reading of this Bill.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—We are told that the whole question of local self-government has been under the consideration of Government and a special officer has been appointed to draft a Bill to be introduced into this Council. We know that in this year's budget Government have provided a sum of Rs. 10,000 on that account and I understand the special officer has already commenced his work. The Bill probably will be ready in 2, 3 or 4 months' time and I feel sure it will be before us in December next at the latest. The question then is whether there is any real urgency about the proposed measure. Your Excellency, I do think and I also know that some of my non-official colleagues think as I do that the Bill is of a very controversial character and it is for Your Excellency's Government to consider whether it is advisable to allow this Bill to be discussed at all.

The position, Your Excellency, is this. There are at present 241 local boards in the Presidency: 215 of these boards are taluka boards and 26 are district boards. We have been just told by the Honourable Mover of this Bill that the question whether the taluka boards shall be allowed to exist side by side with the village panchayats to be constituted is under the consideration of Government. Let me tell this Council for its information that this aspect of the question was considered by the Committee which met under the presidency of my Honourable friend Mr. LAWRENCE. That Committee has recommended in very emphatic terms that the taluka boards must exist, side by side, with village panchayats. It is curious, however, that in spite of that recommendation Government say that they are considering the question. These taluka boards have been in existence for the last 32 or 33 years. Government have no power to abolish them. They are constituted under the Act passed by this Council. Let Government come forward with their proposal to repeal that Act in so far as it constitutes these boards and we shall then consider the proposal on its merits. For the moment, let us approach the consideration of this measure on facts as they are. What does the Bill provide? It proposes to empower the Governor in Council to give elective majority to such of the district boards as may be considered fit for it. I have already told the Council that there are only 26 district boards in the Presidency. The Bill leaves out at one stroke all taluka boards which number 215. The Council is aware that the Local Board Committee recently appointed by Government has unanimously recommended that all the taluka local boards should also have a two-third majority. In spite of that recommendation Government now come forward with this Bill which deals with the question of elective majority on district boards only. Even as regards district boards, the Bill says that the provisions of the schedule which deal with elective majority shall be applied by the Governor in Council by notification to such of the district boards as he considers fit for the exercise of such extended franchise. It further empowers the Governor in Council to withdraw the notification once issued. The Executive Government is thus free under the Bill to grant, or take away from, any District Board elective majority at its sweet will and pleasure. Proceeding further the Council will please note that section 7 of the existing Local Boards Act provides that three constituencies, viz., taluka boards, municipalities and inamdars, shall return members to District Board. The Local Board Committee recommend that there should be some more constituencies. They suggest special constituencies for (1) persons holding degrees and diplomas of the University, Barristers and pleaders, (2) Title-holders and Honorary Magistrates and (3) the Mahomedan community.

These three constituencies have been recommended by the Local Board Committee.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS :—Associations also.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL :—Yes, I beg your pardon. The fourth constituency is suggested by the Committee for Co-operative Credit Societies and other associations. Now so far as the Mahomedans are concerned it has already been decided by Government that they should not have separate representation on local boards if I mistake not. Now let us see how the proposed Bill attempts to solve this question. Under its provisions, the statutory constituencies provided by section 7 of the existing Act are to be entirely abolished and power is given to the Governor in Council instead, to determine by rules constituencies entitled to return members to District Board. I submit that this is a very serious matter. It is proposed to deprive Taluka Boards, Municipalities and Inamdars of the right which they have been enjoying for over 32 years under statutory provision. If the Bill passes into law, the executive Government will be entitled to say by whom and in what manner members to District Board shall be returned. If more constituencies are needed, why not provide them in the Bill itself? We might then consider the case of each constituency on its merits and determine whether it shall return a member or members to District Board. I for one am perfectly against having any such constituency as that of titleholders and honorary Magistrates, who are entirely, I may say, at the mercy of Government. The Honorary Magistrates are appointed by Government and titles are also granted by them. We know in what mysterious manner these appointments are made and titles granted. If the determination of constituencies is left to Government, I strongly feel that the interests of local self-government will suffer. What justification is alleged or even suggested by Government in support of their proposal to do away with the three constituencies existing for so many years past? How can it then be contended that this measure is intended for the advancement of local self-government? I submit that it is in every possible way a retrograde measure. Your Excellency, the Local Board Committee, of which my Honourable friend Mr. LAWRENCE was chairman, recommend the grant of $\frac{2}{3}$rd elective majority to all local boards of the Presidency. Why is this Bill confined to district boards only? What is the object of Government in letting alone every one of the Taluka Boards which, as I have already observed, number 241? Does this not mean that, in the opinion of Government, Taluka Boards are not yet fit for elective majority? I respectfully ask your Excellency's Government to say clearly what is the idea underlying this conduct on the part of Government? Why is Government so illiberal and narrow-minded in their treatment of the question of local self-government? The whole local self-government, as applied to rural areas, my Lord, has been a failure and I repeat that it has been a failure. Well may the officials say that it has not been a failure as regards administrative and executive efficiency. In the name of this "blessed efficiency," the object with which the local self-government was started has been consciously or unconsciously killed outright. Sir Bartle Frere who projected the scheme for local self-government in this Presidency as early as 1863 laid it down distinctly that "the success of local self-government will depend upon the degree of freedom allowed to the local managers of the funds". For 20 years thereafter officials became office-bearers of Committees of management and the funds that were collected were disposed of on the principle of everything for the people and nothing by them. This state of affairs attracted the attention of Lord Ripon's Government who in the year 1882 issued the well-known resolution which my Honourable friend Babu Surendranath Banerji of the Bengal Council characterized as the magna charta of local self-government in this country. That resolution distinctly laid down that there should be a substantial preponderance of elected members on local boards. Thereupon a Bill was introduced in this Council which was strongly opposed by non-official members of those days on the ground that it did not either fulfil the requirements of the resolution of the Government of India or satisfy the legitimate aspirations of the people. Assurances were given that the clause dealing with the constitution would be liberally construed and the elective majority would follow very shortly. If my memory serves me right, His Excellency the then President went so far as to say that it would hardly be his pleasure but that it would certainly be the pleasure of his successor to extend elective majority to rural boards of this Presidency. On the assurances so given the opposition was withdrawn by the then non-official members. It is now 33 years since these assurances were given and I may say 54 years since Sir Bartle Frere laid it down that the success of local self-government would depend on the degree of control which the local managers would be allowed to exercise; and what do we find? Not a single Taluka Board out of a total of 215 enjoys even bare elective majority, let alone an elected non-official President. Now let us compare the position of this Presidency with that obtaining in other Presidencies in regard to this question. We are told, in season and out of season, by officials and some non-officials too, that this Presidency is the foremost of all the Indian Provinces. My Lord, is it the advancement of political constitutions on democratic lines that is really the test of advancement in these civilized days? If that is so, we have to acknowledge with our heads down that our Presidency is behind every important Province in British India. What is the position in other Provinces? Take

(1) Central Provinces Local Self-Government Act.—There are Local Boards and District Councils. In every Local Board and District Council constituted under the Act, the proportion of elected members shall not be less than two-thirds of the whole (vide section 5).

No provision empowering Local Government to exclude any Board or Council from the operation of section 5.

(2) United Provinces District Boards Act.—There are District Boards only.

The proportion of elected members shall not be less than two-thirds of the whole (vide section 4).

Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council may exclude any District Board from the operation of section 4 (vide section 5).

(3) Assam Local Self-Government Act.—There are Local Boards only. Each comprises a sub-division.

The number of elected members shall be greater than that of appointed members (vide section 4).

No provision empowering Local Government to exclude any Board from the operation of section 4.

(4) Bengal Local Self-Government Act.—There are Local Boards and District Boards.

The proportion of elected members of Local Boards established in a district mentioned in the 3rd schedule of the Act shall not be less than two-thirds of the whole (vide section 9).

The proportion of elected members of District Boards shall not be less than one-half of the whole (vide section 7).

No provision empowering Local Government to exclude any Local or District Board from the operation of section 9 or 7.

(5) Madras Local Boards Act.—There are Taluka Boards and District Boards.

District Board to consist of members wholly appointed or partly elected and partly appointed (vide section 11); but where members are partly elected, the number of persons so elected shall, unless the Governor in Council otherwise directs, be three-fourths of the whole number (vide section 13).

Taluka Board to consist of members wholly appointed or partly elected and partly appointed (vide section 16); but where members are partly elected the number of persons so elected shall, unless the Governor in Council otherwise directs, be two-thirds of the whole number (vide section 18).

You will thus see that United Provinces, Central Provinces, Madras, Bengal and even Assam are far ahead of us. What is then the cause of our backwardness for which we have to hang down our heads in the presence of non-official members of other Provincial Legislative Councils? It is no use concealing facts. The truth is that our Government from the start have assumed a wholly unsympathetic attitude towards Lord Ripon's large-hearted and statesmanlike resolution on this all-important question. When the resolution of the 18th May 1 82 was communicated to the Bombay Government for guidance and necessary action, they placed on record their emphatic opinion on it in their resolution of the 19th September 1882, in these terms:

"RESOLUTION OF THE BOMBAY GOVERNMENT.

"Political education is a tender plant of very slow growth and it cannot wisely be forced into a premature development. Before subverting a system which has been found in practice to work so well, this Government would have preferred to proceed more cautiously, to create and educate a public spirit and to ascertain the fitness of the Municipal and Local Fund Committees to exercise more extended powers. Such powers are often abused even in countries where the people have been accustomed to free institutions, the growth of centuries, and His Excellency the Governor in Council cannot but regard with uncertainty and anxiety the bestowal by one step of unlimited powers on communities so new to their exercise. In its recent orders, however, the Government of India insists on the introduction without delay of very radical measures of self-government and having placed on record his opinion that measures so extensive are somewhat premature it will now be the duty of His Excellency the Governor in Council to carry out those measures to the utmost extent which he considers compatible with safety."

After the expression of these views the Bombay Government introduced a measure called the Local Boards Bill to carry into effect, so far as it was then possible according to their ideas of safety, the recommendations contained in the resolution of the Government of India. The Bill, I have already submitted, was strongly opposed by the non-official members of the Council and the opposition was subsequently withdrawn on the unqualified assurances of Government.

Then came the Royal Decentralization Commission charged with the duty of carefully examining, inter alia, the question of the extension of local self-government. The Commissioners, after an elaborate examination of the question, recorded in paragraph 789 of their report their opinion in the following unequivocal terms:

"The resolution of Lord Ripon's Government in 1832 laid down that there should be a large preponderance of non-official members on the rural boards and that is our view also. We consider that the nominated element in a sub-district Board should not exceed the strength sufficient to secure the due representation of minorities and of official experience and that the District Board should also contain an elective majority. In other words the proportion of official and nominated members should be substantially diminished."

Under these circumstances one should have thought that 30 years were long enough for any civilized Government to redeem its pledges solemnly made to the responsible representatives of its subjects. But the Bombay Government did not seem to think so when its views were sought for by the Government of India with a view to make some further advance in local self-government in this Presidency. It appears that of all the Provincial Governments in India it stood alone in thinking that the time was not still ripe to give effect in this Presidency to the wish of the Government of India. They said that it was inadvisable, in present conditions, to provide for an elective majority.

The Bombay Government in expressing that opinion was merely voicing entirely the one-sided opinion of some of its officials and not either of its head nor of the public of this Presidecny. My Lord, neither I nor any other non-official members of this Council have any information as to when and on what materials your Excellency's Government submitted such opinion to the Government of India. It is a matter of great regret that your Excellency's Government should have expressed such opinion. On reading this opinion in May 1915 in the Government of India's resolution on local self-government, I felt so much grieved that I at once gave notice of a resolution asking for ⅔rd elected majority, not on all local Boards in the Presidency but on those which were in existence for 25 years or upwards. The resolution was discussed in the July meeting of that year. Government's attitude was very sympathetic and the Hon'ble Sir P. D. PATTANI, then in charge of the local self-government portfolio, in asking me to move my resolution in a slightly modified form observed :

"These Local Boards came into existence soon after the Local Boards Act of 1884 was passed. These bodies have thus existed for over 30 years without making any advance whatever as regards their constitution. The proportion of nominated and elected members has remained where it was at the inception of this branch of local self-government. The Decentralisation Commission have recommended an elective majority and Government have the power under the Act to grant such a privilege by executive orders. We are conscious that we cannot afford to stand still with regard to these Local Bodies, when we are almost every day making substantial progress with regard to Municipalities."

Your Excellency as President of this Council then asked me to accept the suggested amendment in order that the Government may have a free hand in dealing with the whole question of local self-government. I accepted the suggestion and the resolution was carried in modified form. The question was regarded by your Excellency's Government as so important and urgent that in a few days' time your Excellency's Government issued a Press Note appointing a Committee to consider and report on the whole question of the extension of the principle of local self-government to Local Boards, not later than the end of October. The Press Note, after mentioning some of the causes for the disappointingly slow development of local self-government in the case of Local Boards, went on to say :

"It is difficult to avoid the conclusion that this state of affairs is to a large extent attributable to the fact that the system of administration of Local Bodies still remains what it was when these bodies were first constituted under the present Act some thirty years ago and that during all that time there has been no movement in the direction of endowing them with a more liberal organization and releasing them from the guiding strings of official control."

Further, the object of the Governor in Council in appointing the Committee is emphatically stated in these terms :

"The object which he has in contemplation is the infusion of a more vital and real spirit into the principles of local self-government as applied to the administration of the rural Boards of this Presidency."

LOCAL BOARDS BILL.

It may also be noted that among the questions which under the Press Note the Committee was asked to consider, that relating to the elective majority stands first. In fact the Note was so overflowing with genuine sympathy for public aspirations in this matter, that it created an impression that in reporting to the Government of India that the Bombay Presidency was still unfit for elective majority on rural Boards there was some mistake on the part of the Secretariat. The Press Note delighted all lovers of local self-government in the Presidency and every one of them was anxiously awaiting the Report of the Committee. The report was submitted to Government in or about the month of January 1916. It showed that whatever differences of opinion there were amongst the members of the Committee on other points considered by them, they were all—official and non-official—unanimous on the question of the grant of $\frac{2}{3}$rd elective majority to Local Boards. This recommendation was based on the evidence of witnesses examined by the Committee. They numbered 292. Among them were Collectors and Assistant Collectors in this Presidency, all of whom with perhaps some rare exception supported the grant of $\frac{2}{3}$rd elected majority to Local Boards. In fact both the official and the non-official evidence was almost unanimous on this point. The recommendation of the Committee was under the consideration of Government. All people concerned were perfectly sanguine that a Press Note would issue granting $\frac{2}{3}$rd elective majority to all Local Boards in the Presidency. To their surprise, regret and disappointment there issued in May last a Resolution instead directing the grant of elective majority to a few of the District Boards leaving alone all the Taluka Boards numbering 215 out of a total of 241 Local Boards in the Presidency. I do not know what to say or what to think of this Resolution. Perhaps I had better say nothing.

On the top of all this, comes this Bill, purporting to empower Local Government to extend the provisions of elective majority, to such of the 26 District Boards as they consider fit for such privilege, leaving out of consideration all the 215 Taluka Boards.

My Lord, is it to bring forth this mouse that the mountain was in labor so long? Why does not the Government say straight "having reported to the Government of India in the way we did, Committee or no Committee, we cannot stultify ourselves by at once conceding the elected majority"? We can quite understand that position, for who does not know that a Doctor who has diagnosed the patient's malady egregiously could not be expected to prescribe a dose which would betray his learned mistake?

Under these circumstances, I earnestly appeal to this Council not to allow this measure to be placed on the statute book as it virtually amounts to an insult to the intelligence of the whole people of this Presidency.

The Honourable Mr. SALEBHOY KARIMJI BARODAWALLA:—May it please your Excellency,—The Honourable Mr. PATEL declared in his speech that he understood that Government have decided that separate representation is not to be granted by Government to Mahomedans.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I corrected myself, Mr. BARODAWALLA.

The Honourable Mr. BARODAWALLA:—My Lord, in time to come I wanted to bring before this Council for your Excellency's kind consideration a Bill for the election of Mahomedans, but it is happy indeed that Government themselves have brought out a Bill on this occasion. My Lord, on the first reading of this Bill, I would make only a few observations on its principle indicating if possible the directions in which it could be improved. In the objects and reasons of the Bill it is plainly stated that Government fully intend to revise the whole of the Bombay Local Boards Act as soon as circumstances would permit them to do so. Perhaps it would have been better to take the whole Act as a whole than to revise it piecemeal, especially if the sections now proposed to be revised are to be left imperfect or to be so amended as to work harmfully for certain classes. This Bill is brought professedly to modify the constitution of the Local Boards in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee recently appointed to report on the extension of local self-government in this Presidency. One of the chief recommendations of that Committee is to form separate constituencies for the Mahomedan community and this recommendation is strongly supported by a very large majority of its members including Commissioners of Divisions who are the most experienced District officers. The Committee quotes for its support the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Decentralization for giving special constituencies for the Mahomedans in the local bodies. Since the publication of the report we all know that the Government of the United Provinces has passed a Municipal Act granting communal representation to the Mahomedans; and while the Act was under discussion in the United Provinces Legislative Council His Honour Sir James Meston declared that a distinct promise was given to the Indian Mahomedans by Lords Minto and Morley in favour of granting separate representation to them in the Municipalities and District Boards and his Government was bound to redeem the pledge. Under these circumstances, it is inexplicable to me why the Government of Bombay have not made provision in the Bill for special constituencies for Mahomedans in District Boards. I am thankful to the Honourable mover of this Bill for the declaration that Government will make provisions for the Mahomedans in all such district boards where there is need for their interests to be looked after. But, my Lord, such a provision is halting and would be very inconvenient both to Mahomedans and the officials. What I desire is that once for all legislative sanction should be given to the principle of separate representation for the Mahomedans in local bodies, as it is given in the Councils; the details can be considered in the Select Committee and on the second reading of the Bill. I hope Government will bear in mind this humble suggestion of mine in the later stages of this Bill.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH:—Your Excellency,—The whole question so far as this Bill is concerned is whether in the public interests it is desirable that we should accept the small mercies that Government are pleased to offer us or we should refuse the small mercies in order that hereafter a more comprehensive and more liberal measure may be introduced. It is a matter of pleasure that Government have come to recognize that it is desirable that in some District Boards the elective members should have a larger voice, but I really fail to see why the selection of these boards should be left to the discretion of Government. If the working of the Local Boards has proved efficient or if the elective element of the local boards has shown itself more efficient than of members brought upon the board otherwise than by election it would be exceedingly desirable that, instead of empowering Government to make a selection of such Boards as ought to have a majority of elected members generally to constitute Boards with a majority of elected members subject to the rights of Government to refuse such elective majority, in the case of backward Districts, Government ought to authorize that the local boards be so constituted that the elective members may have a majority. Though I do not believe that there is any portion of the Presidency where the giving of a majority to the elective members is likely to prove injurious, still I would not have the slightest objection to Government reserving for themselves the right of refusing this majority to such local boards as are backward; but to act upon the presumption that, except those few Boards to which Government are pleased to give the privilege, the others would not be able to procure a majority of elected members competent to carry on their work efficiently, does not appear to me to be a very reasonable course for Government to take. I submit that the placing of discretion in the hands of Government to give or refuse an elective majority except for backwardness is most objectionable. The other thing to which I should object is the disenfranchisement of bodies or persons who have hitherto enjoyed the privilege of returning members to local Boards. I do not think it can be said in any case that the enjoyment of this privilege has ever resulted injuriously or has had harmful effect on the working of the local boards and I therefore think that the creation of other elective bodies or the non-recognition of elective bodies which have been hitherto recognized must be regarded as a very retrograde step. For these reasons I consider the measure exceedingly unsatisfactory. I should also consider that the omission of taluka boards from this measure will considerably impair its usefulness. I should think that the taluka boards deserve the same consideration as the district boards and the privilege which is extended to the district boards ought not to be withheld from the taluka boards. Another question that I put forward for the consideration of Government for the development of the efficiency of these local boards is this that they should make the elective members and non-official nominated members feel that they have some power and responsibility, and unless they feel that they possess such power, they would not take interest in their work; the feeling is general that on most of these boards non-official members do not take the same interest as in Municipal Boards; this is due to the circumstance that they find themselves in a helpless condition as against officials members and I should ask Government to take steps to remove that feeling of helplessness altogether. The present Bill as it is would not serve any good purpose because the conditions remain all the same. Government do not ordinarily give substantial majority to the elective portion of the municipalities. What took place in the case of municipalities for a number of years was that the elective members and nominated non-official and official members are almost equal, and where the Government officials take one view the other members generally found that constituted as the municipalities were it would be impossible to make any opposition success. Under these circumstances, I think the idea of giving a majority, which is within the intention of Government and for which Government take this power, would not be useful unless it is exercised in a spirit different from the one which has hitherto been shown.

The Honourable SHEIKH GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH:—Your Excellency,—The object of the Bill is to provide for the increase of the elective members of district local boards and the formation of special constituencies. In the wording of the Bill, your Excellency, I find the expression "a majority of the members of the whole board". The words "a majority" are too vague and indefinite. It may mean a bare majority. That means if there are 30 members on a board, under this clause there can be 16 elected and 14 nominated. But, your Excellency, the time has come when district local boards as well as taluka local boards ought to have a majority of two-thirds elected members. That is the recommendation of the Committee appointed by your Excellency's Government to report on local self-government. From the proceedings of the Committee and its recommendations I find that the opinion of a large majority of official and non-official members is that two-thirds elected members should be given to the taluka as well as the district local boards. Under the Act taluka local boards, municipalities and inamdars and jahagirdas have a right to return members to the district local boards. Under the old system of half elected and half nominated taluka local boards and municipalities, inamdars and jahagirdars used to return half the members of the entire board; but under the new change I find that these three constituencies will return only one-third, and these are the people who directly contribute to the maintenance of the district local boards. I cannot therefore understand why there should be a decrease in their number owing to the change that is being introduced by this Bill. Therefore I request that instead of one-third being given to the taluka boards and municipalities and inamdars and jahagirdars a larger number should be given to them because they pay local cess and they have a direct interest in the administration and management of these boards.

LOCAL BOARDS BILL.

[Sheikh Ghulam Hussein Hidayat-allah.] [15TH MARCH 1917.]

Again, I find from the recommendations of the Committee that some new constituencies are to be created. These are the constituencies of honorary magistrates, title holders and educated people. I think, your Excellency, these three constituencies have absolutely no interest in the district local boards. They do not contribute a single pie to the district local boards. Therefore, I request, your Excellency, that these educated people, title holders and honorary magistrates ought not to be given any seat on the district local boards, but the number of the three constituencies of taluka local boards, the municipalities and jahagirdars and inamdars on the district local boards ought to be increased.

I find in the recommendations of the Committee that separate representation is given to the minority, but at the same time find in the Press Note issued by your Excellency's Government that your Excellency has expressed the opinion that unless the necessity is shown for the creation of separate electorates for the minorities, it will not be given. I would very much like to show to your Excellency the necessity of granting separate representation to the minorities. My Honourable friend Mr. PATEL as well as I would like to have a very large majority of elected members. Now an increase in the elected members means a decrease in the nominated members and a decrease in the nominated members means a decrease in the members of the minorities who, as a rule, come by nomination on these boards. Now, the minorities under the present system when there are half elected and half nominated, have no effective voice in the administration of these boards. When the number will be increased, they shall have absolutely no voice. Therefore, it is very necessary for the protection of the minorities that they ought to have separate representation. I will make my position here very clear. Your Excellency, in my province it is not the Mahomedans who are in minority, but my Hindu friends. I have not the least objection to your Excellency's Government granting them separate representation, because they are in the minority.

I would like, your Excellency, to dispose of some of the usual objections that are raised against separate representation. It is said that the interest of the minorities should be protected by nomination. I have shown that every increase in the elected members means a decrease in the nominated members and consequently a decrease in the representation of the minorities. Again when I read my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL'S note of dissent I find that he condemns nomination. He says that nominated members are the nominees of Government and they look eye to eye with Government. If liberal-minded and advanced members of this Council like the Honourable Mr. PATEL do not like nomination for their advanced community, much less ought they to like nomination for the backward community like that of the Mahomedans. Again it is said that if separate representation is given to the minorities, it will be scarcely conducive to the development of local self-government. I submit to your Excellency that it is the mixed elections, when one community is pitted against another that produce bad blood and communal antagonism. Another plea that is raised against separate representation is that it narrows the angle of vision, but the experience of this Council in which there are the representatives of the minorities must have convinced the members of this Council that they are as independent and as liberal in their views as other members of this Council and they have been working very harmoniously with the rest of the members of the Council for the good of the country.

Above all, your Excellency, these boards have to deal with very important matters such as educational problems, etc. Unless therefore there are the chosen representatives of the minorities on these boards, I submit that the decisions of these boards, however equitable and just they may be, will not inspire confidence amongst the minorities. Now the principle of separate representation has been already accepted by the Government of India by granting to the minorities separate representation in the Councils, and I see that Lord Minto actually promised the Mahomedans separate representation on the local bodies such as municipalities and local boards, and I feel confident that your Excellency's Government will carry out that pledge. Even in the sister provinces of the United Provinces and the Punjab, and even in the Corporation of Calcutta the principle of separate representation is recognised. Only in December last two august bodies, the Congress and the Moslem League, recognised the principle of separate representation to the minorities. Under these circumstances, I feel confident that your Excellency's Government will not have the least objection in recognising the principle of separate representation

Further, I find that the clause in this Bill has been borrowed from the Municipal Act, section 11. That section has been in the Municipal Act for a very long time, but has never been made use of. It has been more or less a dead letter. Therefore my desire is that unless this clause be a dead letter, your Excellency's Government by legislation and enactment should fix the number of seats that will be allotted to the minorities.

With these remarks I support the first reading of the Bill.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur VENKATESH SHRINIVAS NAIK:—May it please your Excellency,—From the statement of objects and reasons it is seen that the present Bill has been introduced with two objects, namely to increase the proportion of elected members and secondly to give facilities to Government for the creation of special constituencies as per recommendations of the Committee appointed by Government to consider and report on the question of the extension of local self-government in regard to the Local Boards. The present Bill concerns only the District Local Boards. In the old Local Boards Act, I mean Act No. 1 of 1884, which deals both with Taluka and District Local Boards, there are provisions for elected members and for nominated members, only if His Excellency the Governor in Council or any other officer duly authorised in this behalf deems it necessary according to different areas and individual circumstances. It may at the outset look rather strange that the present Bill which is introduced solely with the object of giving elective majority compulsorily provides for the nomination of certain persons either by name or by the virtue of the office they hold, whereas according to the old Act nominations were entirely at the discretion of Government. It must be admitted that under the existing Act purely elective Boards could have been formed, but since 1884 neither a single District nor a Taluka Local Board has been so constituted nor any Boards have been given elective majority except in a few cases during this and the latter part of the last year, and that too after the recommendations of the Local Boards Committee. From the existing state of affairs in the mofussil with regard to the constitution of the Local Boards and their working, if these Bodies were to be constituted entirely of elected members, I doubt if different castes and communities forming the minorities would be represented on such Bodies, and such Bodies would properly work. The Committee therefore have rightly recommended that in the constitution of the District Local Boards, there should be a class of persons to be nominated by Government. Though according to the old Act the whole of the Local Boards could have been constituted entirely of elected members, all the Boards that were in existence up till very recently had nominated majority at least by one member. The Bill, as has been now drafted, though it compulsorily provides for nomination, the nominated members cannot exceed the elected members and therefore the public have no reasons to apprehend any fears on the score of nomination being made compulsory under the present Bill. Moreover the Bill gives wide powers to His Excellency the Governor in Council to create special constituencies and to prescribe the number of elected members for such constituencies according to the circumstances of individual district or part of the district. Such of the communities as cannot get representation through others can have their grievances redressed by satisfying Government that they deserve special constituency and representation through it. I hope that the constitution of our District Boards under this new Bill, when it becomes an Act, will be more healthy and greatly representing the popular views and the people will come forward to take greater interest in the local affairs and gain higher and greater experience and training in the affairs of the local self-government.

With these remarks I support the first reading of the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. PANDURANG ANANT DESAI:—Your Excellency,—I cannot see my way to support the first reading of this Bill. In this connection I fully endorse the remarks made by the Honourable Mr. PATEL. The Bill involves an important question of local self-government and therefore anxious consideration should be paid to everything in this connection. The Bill cancels or suspends section 5 of the old Act of 1884.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I rise to a point of order for the purpose of correction. The Bill does not cancel.

The Honourable Mr. DESAI:—It suspends as far as district local boards are concerned. Now that section 5 runs thus:—"Every District and Taluka Local Board shall consist of—

(a) elective members and

(b) such persons if any as the Governor in Council or any officer whom he authorises in this behalf from time to time appoints who shall be called 'nominated members'; 'provided'—I call special attention to this proviso—" that the number of elective members shall not be less than one-half of the whole board exclusive of the president and that not more than one-half of the nominated members shall be salaried servants of Government." So under the old Act of 1884 we have this privilege of having not less than one-half of the members as elected members. Now what more is given by the present Bill? That is to be seen. Part I, Rule 1, of the Schedule of the present Bill, says:—

"(1) A district local board shall consist of—

(a) elective members, and

(b) nominated members, that is to say, such persons as may from time to time be appointed, by name or in virtue of office, by the Commissioner.

(2) A majority of the members of the whole board, inclusive of the president, shall be elective members and not more than one-half of the nominated members shall be salaried servants of Government."

Therefore what more we get by the present Bill is a bare majority which we would not have by the old section 5 of the old Act, and your Excellency's Government should take into consideration the strong recommendations which were made by Mr. LAWRENCE'S Committee after careful and anxious consideration given to the aspirations of the people and the representations which were made from time to time to Government and their officers. My Honourable friend Mr. PATEL, who was a member of that committee, has told us that about 292 witnesses were examined in the enquiry by that committee and that the majority—nearly three-fourths—of those witnesses were of opinion that the majority which is to be given to the district local boards and to the taluka local boards must not be less than two-third. When we have such a strong recommendation from the committee appointed by Government, of which the chairman was a trusted officer of Government, and when the committee is strongly of opinion that the majority should not be less than two-third, I cannot understand why Government is now unwilling to give full effect to that recommendation. The Government's unwillingness clearly shows that they consider that we are not fit to exercise that right. In the remarks made by my Honourable friend

Mr. PATEL he has told us that in several provinces this two-third majority has been granted and I cannot understand why Government should be unwilling to grant two-third majority to us. Is Government of opinion that we, people of this province, are backward in education, are backward in intelligence, or are backward in the capacity which is required for the management of district or taluka local boards? Even the most backward province in India, namely, Assam, has got the privilege of having a strong majority of elected members. I submit, under these circumstances, that the Bill certainly does not satisfy the aspirations of the people and therefore I strongly request Government that this Bill should be withdrawn.

Now it has been pointed out that Government has assumed power of creating constituencies, and in that connection section 7 of the old Act has been suspended only in the case of district local boards. Now the member in charge of the Bill has given us to understand that the educated classes and certain allied interests should be looked after and therefore new constituencies are to be formed. Now in that connection the Honourable Sheikh GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH raised an objection. He says: "why should the educated people who are not contributing a single pie towards the funds of the local boards have any voice in this matter? Why should they be given representation?" I cannot understand his reason. Even though the educated classes may not be contributing largely to the district local board funds, still the educated classes are the brains of the people. People who are actually paying the taxes and the cesses are not in a position to understand things properly, and therefore if in the management of the local boards the brains of the people, the best talents, are available, I cannot understand why they should be excluded. Then it is said that, if the elective principle is brought into force to the fullest extent, that means the reduction of nominated men. No doubt it is so, but if we have got two-third elective members there is room for one-third nominated members, and in making nominations Government has got full power to look to the interests of the minorities. The interests and rights of the minorities or the minor communities can be recognised by Government; also Government has got the power of making provisions for such people who are unwilling to come forward and stand as candidates for election. So both these interests, namely, of minorities as well as of persons who do not come forward to stand as candidates, are served even when one-third is reserved for nomination by Government. I therefore submit, under the circumstances, that this Bill as it comes before the Council, perfectly disappoints the aspirations of the people and therefore the best thing, I think, that Government should do is to withdraw it. Now perhaps it might be said in reply to me that all these questions can be discussed in the Select Committee. Then I certainly would have no objection to the first reading of the Bill.

The point is that the present Bill, as it is, simply says "a bare majority"; I want to know whether it is open to the Select Committee to say that instead of a bare majority two-third majority should be inserted in this clause.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Certainly.

The Honourable Mr. DESAI:—If that could be done by the Select Committee I shall be satisfied and also as regards the other principle, namely, that contained in section 7 of the Act which has been suspended so far as the district local boards are concerned, could the Select Committee specify the constituencies as mentioned in section 7? In section 7 three classes have been mentioned, namely, landholders, municipalities and inamdars. In the same way if it is possible to specify the new constituencies, then I have no objection to the first reading of the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—I think I can assure the Honourable Member that it is open to the Select Committee to move any amendments they like.

LOCAL BOARDS BILL.

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. Curtis; Rao Bahadur Ganesh Krishna Sathe.] [15TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. V. J. PATEL:—Can I understand that even taluka boards can be included?

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—No. That, of course, cannot be. The Honourable Mr. DESAI asked me a question as regards section 7 and section 5. Section 5 has been proposed to be suspended with reference to district local boards only Section 7, per se, applies to district local boards. It will be within the purview of the Select Committee to move amendments with reference to those sections, but not as regards taluka local boards.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur GANESH KRISHNA SATHE:—Your Excellency,—When I rise to make some observations I do not see what position I should adopt, whether I should support the first reading or oppose it. However, I wish to make a few remarks. The first course that I would adopt would be to suggest certain modifications for the information of the Select Committee which will discuss all the sections of this Bill and then I propose to give in short my reason for asking your Excellency's Government to postpone this measure until a future date. The Committee which had met towards the close of 1915 made its recommendations and much has been said about it by my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL. Being one of the members of that Committee I think it is much better to avoid any personal references on a subject like this. But one thing need be emphatically said that all the members of that Committee including official members were unanimously of opinion that there should be a majority of the elective members in the proportion of 2 to 1.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—May I interrupt the Honourable Member? Will he kindly make it clear whether the recommendations of that Committee apply to the whole of the Presidency including Sind or not?

The Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE:—If the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill wants me to be distinct I may say at the outset that Sind has been separately considered and that for the Presidency proper, namely the three Divisions, certain recommendations have been made, viz., there should be two-third elective members both in taluka boards and district local boards. So far as the district local board question is cloncerned I find from a satement made in the Statement of Objects and Reasons that Government do want to respect the recommendations of the Committee. The Bill does provide for an increase. This is what it says: "The object of this Bill is to make legislative provision for modifying the constitution of district local boards, so far as circumstances at present admit, in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee recently appointed in the Bombay Presidency to report on the extension of local self-government. The Bill provides for the increase of the proportion of elective members of such boards." The only apprehension in the mind of some of our friends and in my own mind is because the words "for the increase of the proportion of elective members" occur. Does it really mean the acceptance of the recommendations of the Committee in its entirety or would it depend upon the rules which would be made under Schedule I and which would be made applicable to each district according to the conditions of each district? What is really required is that at least in the case of district boards where men of greater independence and greater intelligence come forward to serve, there ought to be a substantial majority of the elective members and if I have rightly understood the Statement of Objects and Reasons, and if I have correctly understood the position of Government that it wants to adopt the recommendation of the Committee, then what would meet the wishes of all people would be to incorporate the section in the statute itself rather than leave it to be worked out by rules under Schedule I. That means that in the case of district boards there would be an assurance in the Act itself that all these boards would get a two-third majority; but instead of that we are asked to depend on rules which may or may not be made applicable to all districts.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Will the Honourable Member say how he proposes to deal with Sind?

The Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE:—Sind is only one-fourth part of the Presidency and if I am able to point out that there is hardship in the case of three-fourths of the Presidency I think I will be perfectly justified in saying, that if conditions in Sind differ it may be separately treated. I am not here speaking on behalf of Sind with the conditions of which I am not familiar. Then, Sir, as regards the other point, namely, two-thirds majority of elective members on taluka local boards, the position of Government seems to me to be clear that they are not at present prepared to accept the unanimous recommendation of the Committee. In that case I would respectfully submit that as a special officer has been appointed to investigate and report on the whole system of local self-government including district local boards and municipalities, why should we not wait until that report is out and until Government makes up its mind finally whether to give two-thirds majority to taluka boards or not? I say this because this is not an urgent measure which should be ushered into this Council pending the disposal of the report of this special officer. Then, Sir, there is another point, namely, whether certain portions of the schedule could not very well be included in the Bill itself, and when I am referring to this point I refer to section 3 of Schedule I I can quite understand the provision for rules for matters coming under clauses (b), (c), (d) and (e) which require treatment by rules, but so far as prescribing the number and character of the constituencies which will elect members of the district boards is concerned, I think there should be no objection to make a general provision in the Act itself rather than leave it to the discretion of Government to make rules under the Act. Then it was suggested by the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill that this measure was adopted with a view to give opportunities to people in the mofussil to show greater competency and to enable them to exhibit greater interest in local board affairs. Then, Sir, the question is if we are liberal in giving a better constitution to district local boards, would that alone secure the results which are contemplated by the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill? On this point I want only to refer to one paragraph in the Report of the Royal Commission on Decentralization. At page 264, last part of paragraph 789, they say:—

"The want of success of the existing system seems to us to be mainly due to two reasons. First, the boards, especially the sub-district boards have hitherto not possessed any real powers or responsibility owing to want of funds and excessive control." So we are not, as the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill suggests, in a position to finance the boards in question at present or to put these boards on a more substantial financial footing. Similarly, we are not dealing with the question of control. Then in the absence of any provision on these important subjects are we really to believe that local self-government interests will advance, and materially advance, by having such piece-meal legislation and only in this question of elective majority? My submission, Your Excellency, is that it would be better, both in the interest of those who want greater rights in the local boards (district and taluka boards), and in the interest of Government also to wait for the report of the special officer. If such a step is taken then we shall be in a position to tell Government what we really want and what really ought to be given. Now with the piece-meal legislation as brought forward we are bound to enter into minor details and discuss cognate questions. So far as the present Bill is concerned the only point to be considered is with respect to district boards; however, one is tempted to make general observations on the whole working of local self-government in rural areas and that is a position which I would not commend and I think it would be better in the interest of public and Government to wait until Government is in a position to grant us substantially what we really want or at least till Government is in a position to state its reasons why it is not in a position to grant us exactly what we want. With these remarks I oppose the first reading.

LOCAL BOARDS BILL.

[Mr. Phiroze C. Sethna; the President.] [15TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. PHIROZE C. SETHNA:—Your Excellency,—I propose to take my cue from the Honourable Member (Mr. SATHE) who has just resumed his seat. He has suggested a postponement, but has not actually moved it. From the remarks that fell from him as also from the other speakers it seems to me that there is great doubt in the minds of Members of this Council as to the intention that Government have in regard to the extension of the two-thirds majority to taluka boards. The Honourable Mr. PATEL has laid great stress on the point and I believe that the fear at the back of his mind is that while Government in the present Bill only deal with 26 district local boards they have not said one word with regard to the 215 taluka boards, and consequently that question might be shelved indefinitely. The Honourable Mr. PATEL has mentioned and so has the Honourable Mr. SATHE—and the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill has not contradicted that statement,—that so far as we know, Government have deputed a special officer to fully consider and report on the question of elective members, etc., in all municipalities in the Presidency. If that be so, it is not unlikely that his report will be out in the course of a few weeks or months, and perhaps under these circumstances it would be very advisable if a consolidated Bill, as suggested by the Honourable Mr. SATHE dealing both with the district local boards and taluka boards were taken up together. Your Excellency, I would therefore propose an amendment and will take shelter under rule No. 7 of the Rules for the Conduct of Council Business. I know, Sir, that the Honourable Mr. PATEL was ruled out of order, but I may point out to the Council that he proposed an adjournment under this rule prior to the Bill being actually placed before the Council by the Honourable Member in charge. The position at the present stage is different, for the Bill has now been formally placed before the Council and I contend, Sir, that under rule 7 I am entitled to ask for an adjournment. The rule says:—

"A motion that any business before the Council be adjourned or that the Council pass to the consideration of the business next in order in the list of business or that the business under consideration be referred to a Select Committee (in accordance with the rules hereinafter in that behalf contained), may be moved by any member at any time as a distinct question."

If Your Excellency will permit my amendment, you will not be establishing a precedent, for so far as I know a similar course was adopted some years ago in connection with the Town Planning Bill, which was laid before the Council by the member in charge and further discussion on it postponed. I therefore move that further discussion on the reading of the Bill now under discussion be adjourned to the December session of this Council.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I should like to define our position on the whole question raised by this motion for adjournment. I would say at the outset that it is absolutely impossible for Government to agree to tie themselves down definitely or to give any absolute undertaking to bring forward this Bill by December, but in order to place the position of Government perfectly clearly before Honourable Members I should like to review the whole situation regarding this question of local self-government as far as Government are concerned. I rather deprecate the extraordinary amount of heat that my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL endeavoured to engender in the course of his speech finishing up by the remark that he thought that this particular measure was an insult to this presidency. I really think that somewhat more restrained language is desirable. I would, first of all, refer to a particular point that my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL made. I am sure he meant to be fair, but I think he gave the impression to Honourable Members of this Council, when he alluded to a certain resolution of the Government of India in the year 1915, in which they made a reference to a statement made by the Government of Bombay,—that that statement of the Government of Bombay was also made in the year 1915. I should like to inform Honourable Members of this Council that that particular reference was sent up to the Government of India in October 1913—a very few months after my Government came into existence—and I am perfectly prepared to state on behalf of my Government that in the time that has since elapsed and after due consideration of the position we were entitled to change our views on the matter of local self-government. Now with regard to this actual question on which my Honourable friend has moved the motion of adjournment, what is this terrible Bill that has been brought up for the Council to consider and what are the circumstances which have led up to its introduction? I object rather strongly to the Honourable Mr. PATEL dubbing this Government as a reactionary and retrograde Government as far as local self-government is concerned. For what are the facts? Government came to the conclusion that the District Local Board Act had been in force for a great number of years, that it probably wanted considerable amendment and that a good deal more latitude was necessary in the matter of local self-government. We then formed a Committee. The Committee reported and on that Committee's report we did two things. We took action at once with regard to fifteen of the district local boards with regard to the two-third majority, and we considered and finally decided that the whole question of local self-government should be examined by Government at the hands of a special officer, who after full consideration would report on the whole matter in order that we might work out a comprehensive scheme to include panchayats, taluka boards and district local boards. We did not put in taluka local boards into this Bill, because the whole matter was to be dealt with under the main Bill. But we wanted to show the sincerity of our desire to advance in the matter of local self-government and we therefore took steps at once with regard to the matter of district local boards. Now with regard to this Bill, what is it that it wants to do? The executive action we took had this effect that a local board went on to the end of its three years of office and then it got its two-third majority. There are four local boards at this moment which have not come to the end of that period and therefore have not got this privilege. The action which we wish to take by this Bill is to be able, by executive order, at once to give these four local boards the opportunity of having their two-third majority without waiting till they come to the end of their period of three years.

With regard to the matter of constituencies, personally I am perfectly free to admit that instinctively I am not one of those who uphold very strongly the matter of communal representation, but I do say and I have always felt that in this country it is extremely difficult, in the present circumstances and under the present conditions, to get away from the fact that communities must have representation and we feel on this point that if we are going to give a two-thirds majority to the district local boards we ought to ensure as far as we can that particular interests are represented, and that is why we propose to take action by executive order with regard to constituencies, and take into our confidence local gentlemen who have authority and influence in their various districts and endeavour to deal with this particular matter in the fairest way we can. After these remarks I trust that my Honourable friend (Mr. SETHNA) will withdraw his motion for adjournment. It does seem to me a very great pity that we should delay giving these district local boards the chance of having the immediate advantage of having a two-thirds majority and that we should postpone—I think one of them does not come to the end of its period till the year 1918—action which may be of very great use and advantage to these particular boards. Under these circumstances, I very much hope that my Honourable friend will feel inclined to withdraw his motion.

The Honourable Mr. PHIROZE C. SETHNA:—I accept Your Excellency's advice and withdraw my motion.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I am very much obliged to the Honourable Member.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—We are grateful for the assurance which Your Excellency so kindly gave us just now with regard to the object with which this Bill is brought forward. But, my Lord, the Bill does not reflect that assurance. The question of electoral reform, my Lord, does not concern particularly only these four districts for which it is said the Bill is needed, but it concerns all the local boards in the Presidency as a whole, and as we have waited for so long a period as 34 years to get this reform, these four district local boards which Government have in view can very well afford to wait till next December, especially when a special officer is appointed to go into the whole question and when the whole question is going to be liberally dealt with by Government.

My Lord, there was a motion for the adjournment of this Bill which could well have been accepted, but that motion is withdrawn and I do not wish to move it again myself. But as against the first reading of this Bill, I submit, there are several points that we have to take into consideration. In the first place this Bill has been very imperfectly drawn up and it does not deal with the objects for which it is mainly intended. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons it is stated, my Lord, that the object is to provide for the increase of the proportion of elected members. The Bill as it stands does not, however, actually increase the proportion in the case of any boards, and the position is clearly the same as it is under the existing Act as pointed out by the Honourable Mr. DESAI. If I may be permitted to speak more freely the position I am afraid is made even worse, as I think the present Act gives far greater facilities than the Bill contemplates for doing what Government has in view. Section 5 of the present Act runs thus:— "Every district and taluka local board shall consist of elected members and such persons, if any, as the Governor in Council or any officer whom he authorizes in this behalf from time to time appoints, who shall be called 'nominated members'." Now, it is open to Government under this section to appoint any nominated members or not as it may please or to have a wholly elected district board or taluka board. In the Bill as it stands Government is deprived of this discretion and is bound to have at least some nominated members for every board, even in the case of district local boards, for the Bill provides that these boards shall consist of elected members and nominated members. In the Bill as at present drafted the words "if any" which appear in the existing Act have been omitted. These words gave the Government the option to appoint nominated members or not and gave it also the power to constitute wholly elective local boards if it pleased to do so as in the case of municipalities. There is for instance the Ahmednagar Municipality which consists wholly of elected members. I ask why this power to appoint wholly elected boards should be withdrawn. Is it necessary to do it to increase the proportion of elected members when under the law as it stands all members may be elected if the Government choose to allow it?

Then I might point out that while the Bill omits the words "if any" which indicated that the appointment of nominated members was meant to be an exception rather than the rule and requires them as a rule it further provides for the nominations to be made by name or "in virtue of office." These last words do not appear in the existing Act as it stands. So this Bill would appear to be meant to extend nomination rather than the elective franchise and to be in that respect a retrograde measure.

Another point to be noted is that in section 7 of the present Act as it stands we have elaborate provision for regular constitution for the district as well as the taluka boards. Now it is proposed in the Bill to give Government the power to suspend the operation of that section which has worked for 34 years and to leave it to Government to frame any constitution under rules as it may deem proper for any particular board. I am always opposed to this policy of legislation by rules. The rules may take away all that we get under the Act. Why supersede the existing statutary provision by rules which will not be discussed or passed in the Council? What is the necessity for having the constitution fixed by rules when it is already fixed by the statute? This Council will have no control over the framing of the rules. I beg most humbly to submit that that is a move not in the right direction. If Government want to make any improvement in the constitution of the boards as provided in the Act let it be embodied in the Act itself and not left to be done by rules. If any more constituencies are to be added let them be added by the statute and not under the rules.

Then the present Bill does not provide for the taluka boards. In fact, though the taluka boards form the majority of the boards they are not touched by the Bill. Moreover, the operation of the Bill is not limited to the four district boards in which Government contemplate to increase the proportion of elected members but power is given to Government to notify the boards to which the Bill should apply. Again, Government are also given the power to withdraw the notification at any time. This is not a state of things which we ought to allow under any serious legislation. The Bill is thus open to various objections and should I think be kept back, especially if another Bill is to be brought forward shortly, dealing with all these matters. Therefore, I pray that if six months or even one year is allowed to pass it will not affect the case but the Bill in its present form should not be pressed on the Council.

Your Excellency assured us that this Bill is for the promotion of local self-government. If it is the desire of Government to promote local self-government it may very well be done under the existing provisions by making any number of the boards wholly elective or by reducing the proportion of nominated members on them, and there is no need for the present Bill in its unsatisfactory form which has aroused all this alarm and evoked the remarks which fell from my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL. That is the reason why we say that to press forward this Bill will be doing injustice to Government itself, injustice to the boards and injustice to public opinion. And this Bill can very well be kept back in the interests of Government as well as in the interests of the public. I submit, my Lord, it is but proper to postpone this Bill for a short time. Why should Government not wait for a few months more? Why should it make any invidious distinction between the several district boards as also between taluka and district local boards which so far have been governed by the same law and rules and based on the same constitution? I submit that there should be no distinction, so far at least as the constitution of these boards is concerned. Considering all these matters I would pray that this measure be kept back until the report of the special officer appointed to investigate the question of local self-government is received.

With these remarks I oppose the first reading of the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. F. G. PRATT:—Your Excellency,—I do not want to detain the Council for more than a few minutes. After the statement which Your Excellency made about the history of this question and about the attitude of this Government towards local self-government it will not be necessary for me to speak for more than a very few minutes. The Honourable Mr. PATEL made a very great point about the opinion of the Bombay Government which was quoted in the despatch of the Government of India which he referred to but as Your Excellency pointed out a great many things have changed in this world since the pre-war days and I should have thought the Honourable Mr. PATEL would have been more inclined to forget the past opinion of the Government of Bombay about the local self-government question in view of the distinct and definite advance which has been made since Your Excellency's Government came into power in the treatment of this question, particularly, I refer to the appointment of the Local Board Committee and the recent action in taking the important step of appointing non-official Presidents to some of the district boards in the Presidency who will assume office from the 1st of April this year. Then as regards the taluka boards question, I should have thought that the action that has already been taken by Government in the matter of developing non-official agency in the carrying out of local self-government would have been some guarantee, and might fairly be regarded as giving some guarantee, that when the time comes to deal with the constitution of taluka boards the question will similarly be treated in a liberal manner. As regards the majority in district boards, the Honourable Mover of the Bill has already informed the Council that the Select Committee would go the whole length which was desired by the Honourable Mr. PATEL and in fact would discuss the question of giving a two-thirds majority to the boards in the Bill itself. The Local Boards Committee recommended that for the district boards there should be a full two-thirds majority: this Bill so far as it stands in the draft now in my hand only provides for a bare majority. Well, that is in itself an advance from the existing state of the law, which shows that not less than half shall be elected, but if the Select Committee will be free to take the further step into consideration I think that it should satisfy Honourable Members that this Bill may fairly be passed now for first reading. There are one or two other matters which perhaps I might take a minute or two in mentioning and those are connected with the constitution of district local boards. In some districts, particularly in some districts of the Northern Division, it is not altogether satisfactory. In some districts of the Northern Division, in Ahmedabad district for instance, we have a great number of talukdars, great land-owners owning large tracts of country and several villages. They have no special status in the present constitution of the district local boards. Take Dhanduka taluka, for instance; that is a taluka perhaps of 200 villages, of which there are only 12 which are Government villages—ordinary Government ryotwari khalsa villages; the remainder are all talukdari villages. Now, among those 12 Government villages there is only one alienated village belonging to one inamdar. That inamdar would, as the constitution now stands, have to elect himself. Then the whole body of the other village proprietors of the other talukas would have no position, no franchise, no special rights whatever under the provisions of the existing Local Boards Act. Now, that is a matter which, I am sure my Honourable friend the Thakor of Kerwada will agree with me, might very reasonably be amended in the legislation which we are now going to pass. Lastly, before I resume my seat I would like to emphasise that after all the Bill now before us is admittedly not more than an ad interim provisional measure, intended to take some little step in advance, in anticipation, of the time when we hope that a considerable advance will be made. That considerable advance cannot be made until various problems have been cleared up, especially the problem of finance. We made a great many recommendations in our report but every one of our proposals was found to be full of difficulties and it was very difficult to secure any degree of unanimity about them—the one thing certain was that in order to make the machinery work and to secure a real advance in local self-government, it would be necessary to get some substantial subventions from the provincial revenues in aid of the boards' finances. I think it is obvious that this is not the time in which Government can be expected to bind themselves to any great financial commitments. This matter must wait until a more favourable time for consideration arises but that is no reason why we should not accept the very definite advance which this Bill proposes and I therefore support the first reading of the Bill.

The Honourable Sardar DULABAWA RAISINGJI, Thakor of Kerwada:—Your Excellency,—I do not wish to detain the Council very long, but I would just like to make one or two observations in support of this Bill. I support this Bill because I take it to be the first instalment of a new policy in the development of local self-government. This is the first step and as such I accord my hearty support to the first reading of the Bill. The whole situation has been explained by Your Excellency, and the Honourable Mover of the Bill has told us that a consolidated Bill will be brought forward soon. In the meantime I think this Bill tends to widen the scope of election for those local boards which, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, seem fit to exercise larger powers. As Honourable

LOCAL BOARDS BILL.

[15TH MARCH 1917.] [Sardar Dulabawa Raisingji; Mr. Sherriff Devji Kanji.]

Members of this Council might perhaps remember, at the last July meeting of the Council in Poona, I myself had brought a resolution before this Council for due representation of talukdars on local boards, and I am thankful to the Honourable Mover that he has taken that into consideration and he has fulfilled the promise that he gave me then that the interests of the talukdars would not be neglected.

With these few words I beg to support the first reading of the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. SHERRIFF DEVJI KANJI:—Your Excellency,—When the original Press Note was issued by Government in 1915, appointing the Committee to consider and report on the question of the extension of the principles of local self-government in regard to local boards, great hopes were raised that the time had at last come when the Government would take a great step forward to advance the cause of local self-government in this Presidency. But when the report of the Committee was published with the resolution of the Government thereon, I need hardly say that considerable disappointment was caused with regard to the resolution of the Government. And now, when one considers the very narrow scope of the measure before the Council, one cannot feel any great enthusiasm for it. My Lord, it is very humiliating that when other parts of the country have been fortunate to secure a more liberal measure of local self-government, our Presidency with all its education and public spirit should lag behind.

It is highly disappointing to see that the taluka boards have not been included in this Bill, even after the acceptance by the Government of the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S resolution in 1915 recommending that not less than two-thirds shall be the number of elective members on such of the district and taluka boards as the Government may think fit and the unanimous recommendation of the Committee to the same effect for all the local boards. The Bill now before the Council as I have said is very narrow in its scope and does not advance the cause of local self-government much. It provides for elective majority on selected district boards and for the creation of special constituencies. Here, again, the proportion of the elective majority is not definitely fixed by the Bill, but is left to the discretion of the Government. It is now recognized on all hands that if these boards are to be freed from the domination of official control, and if local men are to be made to evince keener interest in local affairs, a substantial elective majority should be provided for on these boards. I, therefore, hold that if the elective majority is to be made a real majority, its proportion should be definitely laid down in the statute. I, therefore, venture to say that unless it is definitely laid down in the statute as unanimously recommended by the Committee that not less than two-thirds of the whole Board shall be elected, it would not satisfy public opinion in this matter. Unless such a substantial elective majority is definitely fixed there will be hardly any real improvement in its present constitution and consequent working of these boards.

With regard to the question of the special constituencies, I welcome the principle of creating special constituencies. And here I wish to bring to the notice of Your Excellency the intensity of the feeling of the Mahomedans in this matter. Looking to the poor strength of their number on these boards, they very naturally and rightly feel that their interests are not adequately represented. I am, however, glad to say that it is very fortunate that the majority of the Committee have recognized and recommended the principle of communal representation. I know that some of my Hindu friends honestly hold different views on this subject. My Lord, whateve opinion we may have in theory about the principle of communal representation, we must all note that it has now come to be recognized in our present political life. It matters very little by which door they come: whether a few seats are reserved for them and they are sent there by a mixed electorate or whether they come there as the representatives of a separate Mahomedan constituency. I would, therefore, request the Government to see if this Bill is at all referred to the Select Committee that an adequate provision should be made for the representation of the Mahomedan interests, having regard to their numerical strength and position in different places. I hope these remarks will receive the sympathetic consideration of this Council.

The Honourable Mr. EBRAHIM HAROON JAFFER :—Your Excellency,—I have very great pleasure in supporting the first reading of the Bill, but would like to point out that when this Bill is referred to a Select Committee the interests of the minorities must be taken into consideration. I do not say that the interests of the Mahomedans only should be considered, but those of any other community in a place where they may be in a minority.

With these words I support the first reading of the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. SIDDHANATH DHONDDEV GARUD:—Your Excellency,—I do think that this Bill is a very unsatisfactory measure, because it leaves out a very large number of taluka local boards which should have benefited by this measure, if Government had only decided to wait for the recommendations and report of the officer who was appointed to investigate this question. I submit, Sir, that in bringing up this question at this stage, only a very small number of district local boards are provided for. The large majority of taluka local boards and district local boards cannot come under the operation of this Bill. We could have waited till that report had been received. Now, in this Bill, the recommendations of the Committee which had been appointed by Government are not being given effect to and I therefore submit that Government should consider the question of keeping back this Bill till the report of the special officer is received.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE :—Your Excellency,—I would recommend to this Council that they should not on this occasion follow the insidious counsels of the Honourable Mr. PATEL. I call them insidious, because they must have more in them than meets the eye; for the reasons and the arguments which he has put forward in no way lead to the conclusion which he asks the Council to accept.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL has made a vigorous attack on the whole history of local self-government in this Presidency. His views have been already recorded in the report of the Local Boards Committee in the dissenting minute which he added to that report; but no doubt he has done well to lay emphasis again on his position, because I am sorry to learn that various members of this Council have never yet read this report.

Now, Sir, this Bill deals with a very small matter in accordance with the recommendations of the Local Boards Committee. It is a Bill to provide for increasing the number of elected members of district local boards. I cannot understand how any member of this Council can seriously object to this aim—the increase of the number of elected members of district local boards. When this Bill goes to the Select Committee, it will be open to the Committee to make various recommendations for the improvement of the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS has explained that it is not open to them to extend the Bill to taluka local boards. This, I may say, is due to the fact that this Bill has been approved by the Government of India, and that an alteration on this point must be subjected again to the approval of the Government of India. But there is nothing to prevent them from recording a recommendation that the Bill should be re-cast in such a way as to extend it to taluka local boards; and though this would delay the execution of the measure, yet if the Council consider the delay unobjectionable, the approval of the Government of India will then be obtained.

In regard to various detailed objections which have been put forward, I take the point raised by the Honourable Sheikh GHULAM HUSSEIN from Sind, that territorial constituencies which have now a representation of one-half of the members will be cut down to one-third. There is no such necessity arising from the Bill. The Bill gives the Government power to adapt the rules and regulations to the conditions of every portion of the Presidency, and if in those districts in which the Honourable Sheikh GHULAM HUSSEIN is interested territorial constituencies require a wider representation, this can be provided by the rules and regulations. This point forms no objection to the acceptance of this Bill.

He also objects to the presence of "educated representatives." But in certain portions of the Presidency "educated representatives" would be most valuable; and again under the discretion left to Government they can be so admitted.

Certain members, I am aware, express great distrust of rules and regulations framed by this Government; amongst them the Honourable Mr. PATEL. I think that this apprehension arises from the undue modesty and want of self-confidence of the Honourable Member. It will always be open to him to use his influence for the modification of any rules and regulations to which he objects, and if he secures support in this Council his views will carry full weight.

There is one point in this Bill to which little attention has been paid in the speeches so far; and that is, the Governor in Council may make rules prescribing the qualifications for voters. There is perhaps no question of greater importance to the establishment of a sound political system in India than the decision of the system on which electoral qualifications should be based or electoral colleges formed. I was glad to see in the papers recently that the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE delivered a lecture on "Political Representation." The more the difficult problems involved in such representation are studied by the members of this Council, the better is the hope of the political advance of this Presidency on sound lines.

It may be of interest to the Council to be reminded that other countries are experimenting in similar circumstances in this matter. In Egypt only four years ago a new Organic and Electoral Law was passed, determining the methods of election to the Legislative Assembly. There they have a form of adult suffrage, under which every 50 adult males elect an Elector-Delegate, and every 800 Elector-Delegates elect a member of the Legislative Assembly, thus each member representing 40,000 males or roughly 200,000 people. Provision is also made that the election should be by an absolute and not a relative majority; and various other useful devices have been introduced to ensure a sound political system.

Now, under the existing law, no variations are possible to meet the varying needs of different portions of the Presidency and no experiments can be made with different measures; the constitution of every body must be on one model; whereas our progress will depend on the comparison of different models and the adoption of the best. When one considers the immense importance of local self-government to the people, when one considers the aims of every self-governing body—to reduce injustice, to help the unfortunate, to improve social conditions, and generally to raise and strengthen the social and economic standard of life—one must appreciate the necessity of the harmonious representation of all interests. It is because this Bill enables provision to be made for all the varied circumstances of the conditions of life of this Presidency that I submit to this Council that we should pass the first reading of the Bill and refer it to the consideration of the Select Committee.

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMTAT:—Your Excellency,—After the statement which Your Excellency has just been pleased to make, I think there can be no harm in sending this Bill to the Select Committee. The despatch of the Government of Bombay to the Government of India in 1915 to which Your Excellency just now referred, the appointment of the Lawrence's Committee for the extension of local self-government, and coming on the top of that the executive action taken by Government: all these three things ought to leave no doubt in the minds of the members of this Council about the sincere desire of this Government to extend the principles of local self-government. But the only difference seems to be how far Government want to extend the principle and how far the people will be able to realise the hopes created by the various measures. I have no doubt that when this Bill is threshed out in the Select Committee, probably the hopes of the Honourable Mr. PATEL will be fully realised; when I say this in supporting the Bill, I would like to make one observation and that is this. The Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE just now asked us what it is that has aroused the fears, rather the attitude of suspicion, on the part of the Honourable Members of this Council with regard to this measure. My only answer is that his Committee has led people in the Presidency to entertain hopes of certain things and probably, unintentionally perhaps, in drafting out this Bill these hopes have not been fully satisfied; that is to say, the drafting of this Bill falls short of the hopes created, rightly or wrongly, by the report of his Committee. In order to show how these hopes were created, I want to refer to one Government resolution before I resume my seat. After the recommendations made by this Committee, Government issued a resolution in May 1916, and although Government have certainly made certain reservations in that resolution regarding local boards, they have at least declared that in determining the constitution of the board under the law as it is proposed to be amended, Government will, with due regard to local circumstances, be guided generally by the principles laid down in paragraph 13 of the Local Boards Committee's report. Now, the drafting of this Bill does not follow any principle of the recommendations contained in paragraph 13 of the report. The Lawrence Committee made 4 recommendations in paragraph 13. The first recommendation was that the proportion of elected members should not be less than two-thirds of the whole. In the drafting of this Bill this principle has not been followed. The second recommendation was that the remainder of the members should be nominated, provided that the number of nominated officials shall not exceed one-sixth of the whole board. That is to say, the recommendation of the Committee is that the number of nominated members shall not be more than one-sixth. In the present Bill it is possible that more than one-sixth could be nominated members. That is to say, the second recommendation of this Committee is also not followed.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Will the Honourable Member kindly explain in detail?

The Honourable Mr. KAMAT:—In paragraph 13 it is recommended that two-thirds should be elected and half of the remainder, that is, one-sixth, should be nominated officials . . . . [Reads] . . . . I beg your pardon. I see I am wrong. I withdraw that statement which was due to misreading the paragraph.

The third recommendation was that not less than one-half of the persons elected shall be elected by territorial constituencies, including the more important municipalities or a group of minor municipalities. I do not see how the Bill follows this recommendation if Government reserve to themselves the right to make rules instead of embodying in the statute the constituencies. What I wish therefore to point out is that although hopes were created that these three or four recommendations would be generally followed, not specifically, still the majority of us feel that instead of embodying these recommendations in the statute, a good deal of power has been reserved by Government to themselves only, under the rues which they will make.

If however all these points are rectified in Select Committee, which I think can be done, there should not be the least reason why we should not accept the principles of this Bill and send it to the Select Committee.

LOCAL BOARDS BILL.

[15TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. G. S. Curtis ; Mr. Patel.]

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—May it please Your Excellency,—It is a matter of some regret to me personally that this somewhat humble measure should have aroused so much heat on the part of my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL and some other gentlemen who have criticised it so severely. Speaking personally, one is quite prepared to accept responsibility for one's failings and omissions, but it is a little hard to be beaten with a stick because of something that a past Government did in 1882, or, coming to a later period, in 1913. The position I would remind the Council as far as the deeds of this Government are concerned is clear. Fifteen out of 19 district councils have the elected two-thirds majority. Out of the remaining 4, one is the important board of Poona of which the new President is to be nominated from the 1st of April next, and another is the board of which the Honourable Mr. DESAI is the representative, whose term does not expire till 31st December 1918. It is in order to ensure that the elective element shall be increased in the four boards, of which these are two, that the present power is taken to suspend section 14.

First of all as regards the vagueness of the reference in Part I as to rules, I may remind the Council that in paragraph 4 of the Committee's (I mean the Committee presided over by the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE) report, the words are these: "The recommendations of the Committee are necessarily and purposely elastic. They recognize that the proposed reforms cannot be introduced everywhere and at once. These considerations apply with special force to the province of Sind where circumstances are admittedly very different from those of the Presidency proper. These local pecularities demand local consideration, and the extent of the applicability of the principles and proposals of the Committee's report to that province must be determined there." Now, Sir——

The Honourable Mr. PATEL :—Does the Honourable Member read this as meaning that the recommendations of the Committee do not apply to Sind and that the two-thirds majority does not apply to Sind?

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS (continuing) :—My answer to the Honourable Member's question is in the terms of the report itself :—"They recognize that the proposed reforms cannot be introduced everywhere and at once." If the Honourable Member has a little patience he will see the point I am trying to make upon. Part I of the schedule relates to the constitution of the board. Paragraph 3 of Part I relates to the constitution of the constituencies. Now, Sir, it is perfectly possible that it may be necessary to prescribe by rules for the formation of certain peculiar constituencies before you prescribe by rules whether the majority on a new board should or should not be as elective. For instance, it was pointed out by the Honourable Mr. GHULAM HUSEIN HIDAYATALLAH that it may be necessary to pass rules prescribing special constituencies in certain districts in Sind or certain backward districts in the Presidency proper in which the prescription of a two-thirds elective majority would be unsuitable. In the peculiar circumstances of some districts in this Presidency which are not homogenous with the more advanced districts to which the Honourable Mr. PATEL has referred, it is impossible to lay down at once by rules that the elective majority shall be in definite proportion to the board. It is advisable, as the Committee have said, to make the recommendations elastic, and it is with that object that this schedule has been framed.

Once more I would emphasize the fact that, if proof of the bona fides of Government in framing this schedule is wanted, that proof is found in the fact that Government has introduced this reform into 15 boards out of 19. I cannot think what more satisfactory guarantee or what more assurance the Honourable Members will want. So much as regards the particular measure that is before us now.

As regards the taluka boards, we have no objection whatever to the principle that the taluka boards should have a two-thirds majority. But the divergency as between one taluka board and another, even in the same district, is very much greater than as between district boards. It is possible for instance that the taluka boards in the West Khandesh would not be suitable for the immediate application of the elective element.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—For that Government have got power to exclude any taluka boards under section 8.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS (continuing):—I am fully aware of that provision of the law. What I say is that these points have to be taken into consideration and it is one of the points which has added to the difficulty of the task of remodelling this law as applied to (1) taluka boards, (2) district local boards, (3) panchayats of single villages, (4) panchayats of union villages, (5) notified areas under the Local Boards Act, and (6) notified areas under the Municipal Act. The Honourable Member will see if he thinks over it that the task is a difficult one and if as he indicates with emphasis the object of Government was to delay any advance until some complicated measure could be brought forward, nothing would have been easier than to have hung up the whole thing. What did Government do? They did not delay. They did not even wait for this extremely modest measure. They took action by an executive order to give effect to the most important recommendations of the Committee and that effect has already taken place in 15 boards out of 19. It will take effect immediately next month in Bijapur Local Board which is represented by the Honourable Mr. DESAI. There are three more coming in and from the 1st of April there will be in all four, that is, in all four districts will have non-official Presidents.

I think that I have said enough to make it clear that there is nothing in this particular measure to arouse any ill-feeling or suspicion. I would ask therefore that the Bill be read a first time.

[Bill read a first time.] Motion for the first reading of the Bill was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I think it will be convenient to the Honourable Members if we adjourn till 3-15.

The Council then adjourned for lunch.

[After lunch.]

The Council re-assembled at 3-15 p. m.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—As the motion for the first reading has been passed I rise to move that the Bill be referred to the Select Committee consisting of the following Honourable Members:—

The Honourable Mr. F. G. PRATT, the Honourable Mr. W. C. SHEPHERD, the Honourable Mr. V. J. PATEL, the Honourable Mr. P. A. DESAI, the Honourable Rao Bahadur G. K. SATHE, the Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS, the Honourable Khan Bahadur PIR BAKSH walad MIAN MAHMUD, the Honourable the THAKOR of KERWADA, the Honourable Mr. S. K. BARODAWALLA, and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 15th June next.

The Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE:—Your Excellency,—I propose to add the name of the Honourable Mr. GARUD who is the member for the local boards in the Central Division.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Yes, with the inclusion of the name of the Honourable Mr. GARUD.

The Bill referred to a Select Committee. The motion was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Rules for the conduct of business at Meetings of the Legislative Council of the Governor of Bombay. The Honourable Mr. PATEL.

COUNCIL BUSINESS RULES.

[15TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel.]

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—The particular rule which I move should be amended is on page 200 of the Council Manual. It is sub-rule 6 of rule 28. It says:—

"Where the previous sanction of the Governor is required, by section 38 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, to the introduction of any measure because it affects the public revenues, or imposes any charge on such revenues, a copy of such sanction shall be annexed to the notice prescribed in sub-rule (2)."

Now, sub-rule (2) says :—

"Any member desiring to move for leave to introduce a Bill as aforesaid shall give the Secretary at least two months' previous notice of his intention and shall, together with the notice, send a copy of the Bill and a full Statement of Objects and Reasons, and any other necessary papers".

The amendment which I propose is this :—

"For the words 'a copy of such sanction shall be annexed to the notice prescribed in sub-rule (2)' in sub-rule (6) of rule 28 of the Rules for the conduct of business at meetings of the Legislative Council, substitute the following words :

'such sanction shall be obtained by the member before he moves at a meeting of the Council for leave to introduce that measure'."

The amended sub-rule will read thus :—

"Where the previous sanction of the Governor is required, by section 38 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, to the introduction of any measure because it affects the public revenues, or imposes any charge on such revenues, such sanction shall be obtained by the member before he moves at a meeting of the Council for leave to introduce that measure".

The Council will see that all I require by this amendment is that the obligation of annexing a copy of the Governor's sanction to the notice under sub-rule (2) of rule 28 should be done away with. The circumstances which have given rise to this motion are briefly these :—

On the 31st of January last I gave notice, under rule 28 (2) of the Rules for the conduct of Council Business that I intended to move at the July Sessions of this Council for leave to introduce two Bills, copies of which I had annexed. I did not hear for some time as to what became of those Bills in the Secretariat. Three weeks later, that is on the 21st of January 1917, I got a reply from the Secretary to the Legislative Council, which I read with your permission. I shall not read the first part of that letter as it has got nothing to do with the present amendment. In the second part, the Secretary says :

"With reference to your second Bill for amending the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, as the proposed new section 62(e) affects the public revenue of the province and imposes a charge on those revenues, the previous sanction of the Government is required under the Government of India Act, 1915, section 80, sub-section (2). I am to observe that this sanction has not been obtained and I am therefore to return herewith your second Bill and to inform you that if you should feel disposed to proceed with this Bill, you may obtain the previous sanction of the Governor and annex a copy of such sanction to the notice for leave to move the Bill in accordance with sub-rule (2) of rule 28 of the rules for the conduct of Council business".

I now invite the attention of this Council to page 41 of the Council Manual. Sub-clause (2) of section 80 of the Government of India Act on that page says :—

"(2) It shall not be lawful for any member of any Local Legislative Council to introduce, without the previous sanction of the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Chief Commissioner, any measure affecting the public revenues of the province or imposing any charge on those revenues."

This section, Your Excellency will agree, does not require a member of a Local Legislative Council to obtain the Governor's sanction prior to notice of motion for leave to introduce any Bill. It merely makes it unlawful for him to introduce it without the previous sanction. He is not bound to apply for and obtain sanction before notice. He may obtain it at any time before actual introduction of the Bill in the Council. When his motion for leave appears on the aggenda for discussion and if he has not obtained the sanction till then, the Council is perfectly at liberty to say "Well, under section 80 the sanction of the Governor is required as the Bill affects the provincial finances and as it has not been obtained, we refuse leave". But rule 28 (b) goes further than this and requires that a copy of the sanction should be attached to the notice of motion for leave. Then there is another practical difficulty in the way of a member desiring to introduce a private Bill if your Excellency's Government were to enforce the observation of this rule.

According to my reading of the introductions regarding legislation in local councils the Governor has no power to grant sanction at all until the expiry of two months from the date of notice for leave to introduce a Bill. I would ask the Council to turn to page 234 of the Council Manual. The proviso to rule 4 on that page says :—

"Provided further that in the case of Bills of non-official Members which require the previous sanction of the Governor under section 80 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915, such sanction shall not be given until the expiry of two months from the date of the notice of intention to introduce, unless the orders of the Secretary of State and the Government of India have been received sooner."

This proviso assumes that as soon as Local Government receives notice of motion for leave to introduce a private Bill under rule 28 (2) it becomes the duty of that Government to communicate the Bill to the Secretary of State and the Government of India and wait for their orders for two months and then the Governor should proceed to consider any application for sanction. May I now ask you to turn your attention to page 232 of the Council Manual. Rule 2 on that page says :—

"(1) Save as otherwise provided in these rules, every draft Bill, with all necessary papers connected therewith, shall before introduction be transmitted with a despatch to the Secretary of State.

"(2) In the case of a Madras, Bombay or Bengal draft Bill, the despatch shall be addressed by the Local Government to the Secretary of State direct, a copy thereof and of its enclosures being forwarded for information with a covering letter to the Legislative Department of the Government of India."

Now this rule requires the Government receiving notice of a Bill to communicate it to the Secretary of State and the Government of India, and under the proviso to rule 4 which I just read to you the Governor has got to wait for two months from the date of such notice and then proceed to consider whether he should grant or refuse sanction. If rule 28 (6) is enforced it becomes practically impossible for any member of this Council to bring in a Bill which requires the sanction of His Excellency the Governor because the rule says that a member must annex a copy of the sanction to the notice under section 28 (2) and that sanction could not be had until the expiry of two months from the date of that notice.

Under these circumstances, all I ask is that sub-rule 6 of rule 28 of the rules for the conduct of Council business be so amended as to dispense with the obligation imposed on a member to annex a copy of the Governor's sanction to notice under sub-rule (2) of that section ; the motion is the outcome of the experience I have had very recently in connection with a Bill of which I gave notice. It has been returned by the Secretary on the ground that no copy of the Governor's sanction was annexed to the notice. The Governor could not grant me the sanction even if he willed to do so and I do not know what to do. It is therefore that I have brought this motion and I trust Government will read the rule as I read them and accept the amendment.

COUNCIL BUSINESS RULES.

[15TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Mahadev Bhaskar Chaubal]

The Honourable Mr. MAHADEV BHASKAR CHAUBAL :—Your Excellency,—This Council will remember that clause (6) of rule 28, to which the Honourable Member has referred, was amended to its present form only so recently as January last year—1916. It was published by Government Notification, Legal Department, No. 51, dated 15th January 1916, having been passed in this Council at its meeting in the previous December. The first amendment then made was in clause (2). A member could previously introduce a Bill with only seven days' notice: the inconvenience of this very short period was felt, and the amendment in clause (2) was made so that it read as under:—

"Any member desiring to move for leave to introduce a Bill as aforesaid shall give the Secretary at least two months' previous notice of his intention and shall, together with the notice, send copy of the Bill and a full Statement of Objects and Reasons, and any other necessary papers."

Now there is no motion before the Council for the amendment of this clause (2) and I do not yet see how the Honourable Member's will improve assuming for a moment that his amendment is carried. Because even if you delete the word proposed in clause (6) clause (2) will still make it necessary that the sanction should accompany the notice, unless it is held that the order giving the necessary sanction is not one of the necessary papers. And on that point section 80 of the Government of India Act, 1915, is, I think, quite clear. It distinctly says that it shall not be lawful for any member of any local Legislative Council to introduce any measure affecting the public revenues without such sanction. Now I think that a motion for leave to introduce is "a measure," and that measure shall not be undertaken in any Local Legislative Council unless the previous sanction of the Governor has been obtained. It corresponds practically to the wording of section 67 which relates to the Government of India legislation, and if you look to clause (2) of section 67, it says:—

"It shall not be lawful, without the previous sanction of the Governor-General, to introduce at any meeting of the council any measure affecting—so that it is quite clear, whatever measure it be, whether it is leave to introduce or anything else, one of the most necessary things for the introduction of a measure which comes under (a), (b), (c) or (d) of section 67 which affects the public revenues of the province under section 80 must have the previous sanction of the Governor attached to it. Therefore there can be no question that in considering clause (2) of rule 28 this sanction must be considered to be one of the necessary papers, and therefore even if the amendment which my Honourable friend wants is carried, it will not exonerate him from the liability of attaching the sanction to the notice unless it is held that this sanction, which is under the Government of India Act an indispensable and necessary condition, is done away with. If it is one of the necessary papers—and as to which section 80 is clear—then such necessary paper must be attached to the notice which is given under clause (2). I am only pointing out at present that the amendment in clause (6) as desired will be unavailing so long as clause (2) remains as at present. Further I may state for the information of the Honourable Member that these amendments were expressly undertaken at the instance of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State first deals with a similar clause in the Government of India rules, where the provision was for three days' notice like seven days in our former rule. Then referring to our legislation the Secretary of State says:—

"Similarly, rule 28 of the rules for the Bombay Council requires 'subject to the provisions of the Indian Councils Acts, 1861 and 1892,' seven clear days' notice of the title and subject of a Bill". Until he has received the sanction I ask the Honourable Member's special attention to this wording—"it is not open to an Additional Member to move for leave to introduce a Bill covered by the proviso to section 19 of the Indian Councils Act in Your Excellency's Council. Rule 16 of the rules of the legislative business confers upon him no power of giving notice to the Secretary until he is in a position to act in accordance with the provisions of section 19 by having obtained the previous sanction of Government. It was on account of this pronouncement of the Secretary of State that these amendments were undertaken in December 1915 and were published by Legal Department Notification of January 1916.

Again the only hardship which the Honourable Member can probably complain of would perhaps be that instead of two months which is specified as the period in clause (2) of rule 28 it would practically work out to four months if the provisional rule in the instructions is attempted to be worked out. But it may be doubted if this is a real hardship. If a member undertakes the solemn task of introducing legislation on any subject in this Council, I do not think that four months' previous time for his thinking and enabling the other people—the Government of India and the Secretary of State—to think about it is a very long period and that it introduces any considerable difficulty in the way of introducing any private legislation. Some obscurity is no doubt caused owing to the provision in the instructions which the Honourable Member has referred to, but that instruction is only a provisional one and ought not to be construed as making all introduction of private bills impossible. It has not yet been definitely ruled by the Government of India that that instruction will stand. It is being tried as an experiment perhaps, and if found inconvenient may have to disappear. It will have to be further noticed that this time is required for the purpose of the Government of India and the Secretary of State for considering the general principles of the Bill before they determine as to whether to accord sanction or not, and you will see that when a Bill, with the Statement of Objects and Reasons, is received by this Government, as the Honourable Member has pointed out, it has got to be forwarded to the Government of India and to the Secretary of State; and they have got to consider the questions of policy involved if any and the question about how it would affect the public revenues, etc. It is not, you must know, in all cases that this period will be four months. It will continue to be two months in the cases of other Bills except those affecting public revenues. In those cases only the period is likely to be increased to four months. Under these circumstances, seeing that this amendment was introduced only so recently as January 1916 and has worked only for one year, without causing any considerable difficulty or without working any hardship in the way of Honourable Members, I do not think that the amendment now proposed should be accepted. The Honourable Member points out that he felt difficulty in connection with his own Bill. That may be. He seems to have applied for leave to introduce the Bill early in January. Instead of doing so, if he had thought of it in October, I think he would have been able to introduce the Bill in the session that he originally wanted to move it in. But, for the reason that this amendment in clause (6) and the corresponding amendment in clause (2) were introduced at the direct instance of the Secretary of State, I do not think that this Council will be in a position to adopt the present motion for changing the amendment which was brought about only in January 1916.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I must say at once that the remarks of my Honourable friend Mr. CHAUBAL are quite wide of the mark. They evade instead of answering the real point at issue, namely, that His Excellency the President has no power to grant sanction until the expiry of two months from the date of notice for leave to introduce a Bill. I will read to this Council once more the proviso to rule 4 which is at page 234 and I hope the Honourable Members will kindly look into it very carefully:—

"Provided further that in the case of Bills of non-official members which require the previous sanction of the Governor under section 80 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915, such sanction shall not be given until the expiry

of two months from the date of the notice of intention to introduce, unless the orders of the Secretary of State and the Government of India have been received sooner."

Now I gave notice on the 31st January last. I ask this Council to say whether His Excellency the Governor has any power to grant the necessary sanction until the expiry of two months from that date. The Bill is lying with me, returned by the Secretary on the ground that I had not annexed a copy of the sanction. I am asked to do what is impossible. I ask your Excellency to please read the rules for yourself and then if your Excellency assures me that you would entertain and dispose of my application for your sanction—and I am prepared to give my application to-morrow—I shall withdraw my motion at once.

The Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL:—Will the Honourable Member note the proviso as it is given. Perhaps it was not correct to publish it. If he refers to the foot-note at page 234 he will understand it. This proviso was provisionally inserted. It is only a provisional arrangement. It is not definitely said whether it would stand as a permanent arrangement or not.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Is it in force or not at present?

The Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL:—Of course it is.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—After some consideration I think I must agree that the Honourable Member has raised a very difficult and rather interesting point, but Government cannot agree with his amendment at present. Perhaps if I can give the assurance that Government will go into the point he raises and make suggestions and alterations that may seem necessary, will that satisfy the Honourable Member?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency, what will happen to the Bill which the Secretary has returned to me on the ground that I had not annexed a copy of your sanction.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—We cannot go into it now. Just within the next two or three days I assure the Honourable Member that steps will be taken as I indicated.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Under the circumstances I ask your Excellency's permission to allow me to postpone further consideration of this amendment.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Would not the Honourable Member be generous enough to withdraw his amendment?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I would certainly and I do.

Discussion of matters of General Public Interest.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Discussion of matters of General Public Interest. Resolution No. 1. The Honourable Mr. PATEL.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency, the resolution which I have the honour and privilege to move reads thus:—

"This Council recommends that, in pursuance of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Decentralization which were commended by the Government of India in their recent Resolution on Local Self-Government, steps be taken to constitute village panchayats in this Presidency in select areas and if necessary a mixed committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to suggest and advise Government on the necessary methods of detail to be adopted for the purpose."

Now Your Excellency knows that this institution of village panchayat existed in this country from time immemorial. History tells us that at a time when the idea of corporate organisation was not even born in any of the new civilized countries in the world, at a time when the cult of individuals was the order of the day, almost every village in this great country was a Government in itself, self-contained, self-governed and self-defended. Eminent men like Sir Henry Maine, Sir Thomas Munro, Sir Charles Metcalfe and others have testified in very glowing terms to the existence and usefulness of this institution. Unfortunately, however, the policy on the part of earlier British Rulers centralized the judicial and executive powers in their own hands and those village republics were killed out partly through ignorance and partly through a desire to get a firm grip on the land. Every Indian who lives and moves among the people, knows how deep-rooted this instinct of self-Government is in villages. It is still living though there is no scope for it. It is now universally recognised that their destruction was wrong.

Lord Morley, in his immortal despatch of the 27th November 1908, observes: "Your Excellency will recall that the resolution from which I have quoted treats the sub-division, taluq or tehesil, as the smallest administrative unit. It is a question whether it would not be a wise policy to go further. The village in India (generally) has been the fundamental and indestructible unit of the social system surviving the downfall of dynasty. I desire Your Excellency in Council to consider the best way of carrying out a policy that would make the village the starting point of public life."

The Decentralization Commission has after elaborate inquiry recommended that in the interest of Decentralization as well as for the purpose of associating the people with local administration, an attempt should be made to constitute and develop village panchayats for the administration of local village affairs.

The Government of India have in their recent resolution on local self-Government expressed their approval of the recommendations of the commission and stated their views thus: "Throughout the greater part of India the word Panchayat is familiar. The lower castes have voluntarily constituted panchayats to whom they allow quasi-judicial authority in social matters. The mere artificial administrative committees such as Choukidari Panchayats, Local Fund Unions and village Sanitation and Education Committees and in places even village panchayats already exist. The spread of Co-operative Societies and the distribution of Government advances in times of famine and scarcity on joint security are educative influences. Village tribunals for the disposal of petty civil suits have got beyond the experimental in some places and are in the experimental stage in others. There is, therefore, some material with which to build."

My Lord, it is thus clear that the desirability of the constitution of village panchayats is universally admitted. The sole question which remains is of the form which such panchayats should take. On this question the Decentralization Commission has made certain recommendations. The Government of India have chosen to leave the matter in the hands of local governments and administrations. The official and non-official opinion is widely divergent on the question of the manner and the method in which the constitution of the panchayat can be usefully and successfully advanced. One view is that the legislation in this matter should be permissive and general, the other is that it should be compulsory. Some think that the experiment should be made in selected villages in areas larger than a village where the people in general agree and others say that the panchayats should be introduced into as many villages as possible irrespective of their area or population.

There is also divergence of view as to whether these panchayats should be under the District Collector or the District Board. Then again, some people advocate the appointment of a special officer as in the case of Co-operative Society for the establishment and supervision of panchayats. There is also a difference of opinion on the question whether there should be general panchayats with both administrative and judicial functions or that these two functions should be vested in separate bodies of panchayats.

So also there is the question of jurisdiction of panchayats in civil and criminal cases. Some people are of opinion that such jurisdiction should be exclusive; others hold a different view. In connection with this question minor points such as court-fees procedure and the rest have also to be settled.

The following other questions will also arise for consideration and settlement :—

(1) Whether the existing village communities such as those of village sanitation and education should be merged in the village panchayats.

(2) Whether these panchayats should have powers of taxation and, if so, to what extent.

(3) What should be the relations of the panchayats with other administrative bodies.

(4) What should be the financial relations between the Local Boards and the village panchayats.

(5) What should be the constitution of the panchayats and whether the village head-man should be made ex-officio Chairman or the Chairman should be elected by the members of the panchayat.

(6) What should the powers and duties of the panchayats.

(7) Whether Taluka Boards or District Boards should not be abolished after the establishment of panchayats.

My Lord, if those questions are to be satisfactorily settled before any Bill is introduced into this Council, the only way, I submit, is to appoint a small committee of officials and non-officials to go through the whole question and make recommendations to Government as to the lines on which such Bill should be drafted. The importance of the question cannot be gainsaid. The village panchayat is to constitute the lowest rung of the ladder of self-Government. As Lord Morley has observed in his despatch, the village ought to be the starting point of our public life in India. My Lord, I respectfully submit that in a matter of such great importance, it is the wiser policy to ascertain what the representatives of the people want. This resolution proposes nothing more. Instead of discussing all these points in the whole Council I say let us have a Committee to discuss the matter and frame a sound scheme before proceeding further. If we want these panchayats, we would rather wait and have proper panchayats, then hurry up and get unsatisfactory panchayats. Government have waited so long since the report of the Decentralization Commission. We, non-official members, have all along repeatedly pressed the question on the attention on Government. The only reply was that the matter was under their consideration. The consideration has not yet ended. This Resolution puts the best possible interpretation on it and assumes that the delay is due to the difficulty of solving all the points above indicated and all I ask now is "wait and let us non-officials help you in the consideration of this question; take us into confidence, talk the matter over with us and then prepare the necessary draft Bill". We offer our co-operation in this difficult task in the hope that it will be accepted at once with the same cordiality as it is offered with. When I gave notice of this resolution Government wrote to me that this matter was under their consideration and that no useful purpose would be served by any discussion on it. I at once pointed out that the subject was of very great importance and had reached a stage when the advice of non-official members of the Council would be very useful to Government. Your Excellency thereupon graciously admitted the resolution for discussion and I now appeal to your Excellency's Government to accept it.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—The Honourable member would, I suppose, have a Committee for panchayats, a Committee for Taluka Local Boards and a Committee for District Local Boards.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL : —In reply to this remark of your Excellency, I should like to point out that when your Excellency's Government very recently appointed a Committee to consider the question of the advancement of local self-Government as applied to rural areas, I was the first man to suggest to my Honourable friend Mr. LAWRENCE, the Chairman of this Committee, that VILLAGE PANCHAYATS.

[Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; the President; Mr. Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh; Mr. Pandurang Anant Desai.] [15TH MARCH 1917.]

Government should be moved to allow the Committee to consider the whole question of local self-Government beginning with the Panchayats. The Chairman agreed with me and at once wrote to Government for the necessary powers in that behalf. Government however refused to accede to our request. Why should I be blamed if I ask for a separate Committee for the Panchayats?

His Excellency the President.—The Honourable Member gave very interesting information on Panchayats notwithstanding.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL.—I did not. The Committee made certain recommendations in regard to village Panchayats and I had to record my minutes on them pointing out that it was no business of the Committee to make any such recommendations in view of the fact that Government had definitely refused to allow the Committee to consider the question of village Panchayats.

Now to proceed further. I sincerely believe, my Lord, that the acceptance of this resolution will materially assist Government in the preparation of the Bill and expedite its inauguration which is so urgently needed to arrest the present disintegration which is proceeding so fast in the rural manhood of this country and I trust Your Excellency will see your way to take the representatives of the people into confidence before any Bill on this important subject is introduced into this Council.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH.—Your Excellency,—I and my friend Mr. PATEL come from a part of the country where village Panchayats at one time existed in an exceedingly developed condition. We have had all over Gujrath at one time the village coparcenary system under which there were a large number of joint land proprietors who always formed a body and some reminiscence of the powers that they enjoyed can be well seen both in the village constitution of Kaira and Broach. The system appears to have been brought from Punjab and there is a large body of evidence to show that this system was not confined to the two districts but also existed in Surat and in Ahmedabad. The Talukdari tenure appears to have worked to destroy the system in the Ahmedabad district and other conditions which it is not necessary for me to mention here interfered with the success of the institution in the district of Surat. What I would submit is that if any experiments have to be tried the districts of Kaira and Broach would afford the most favourable conditions for their success. I cannot believe that the same system will be suitable for all places. Local conditions may require changes, but some main principles will remain the same, and a Committee is absolutely necessary for determining these main principles. As a matter of fact the success of District Local Boards or Taluka Local Boards would depend upon constitution of the village communities and I think it is most desirable that there should be an inquiry. Such a Committee would lay down the principles upon which the experiments are to be made and the legislation which should be undertaken, if necessary. In my opinion the experiments ought to be tried in areas where there are conditions most favourable to its development and such areas should be selected in the first instance for them.

The Honourable Mr. PANDURANG ANANT DESAI:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the resolution which has been moved by the Honourable Mr. PATEL. It is admitted on all hands, by the Secretary of State, by the Government of India and by the Decentralisation Commission that the village panchayat, which was once in existence in this country, should be revived as soon as possible. In ancient days these village Panchayats were in existence in almost every part of India and each village was on a miniature scale a republic in itself. It was self-contained. It had its own accountant, the kulkarni, it had the astrologer, the joshi, the carpenter, the blacksmith, the goldsmith and all persons who could supply the wants of each village. Each village had no necessity of depending for its wants on the neighbouring village. Therefore the propriety and the usefulness of the village Panchayats was recognised in the olden days. The village Panchayats came to an end after the advent of the British rule, and now our rulers have understood that the village Panchayats are necessary to be revived. Some of the advantages of the village Panchayats are obvious. If the village Panchayats are invested with the power of deciding civil matters or deciding criminal matters of lesser importance, the advantage will be that these members of the Panchayats, being persons living in the same village where the disputes arise, know the parties who come for the decision of the village Panchayat. They know which party is truthful and which party is untruthful. They know the witnesses who are to give evidence and practically everything that would be useful in comming to a decision. As they live in the same village, they know the local conditions and, more than this, is the fact that the cases can be decided with speed. Now we find in taluka stations decisions are not given sometimes for four or six months; but if the decision is to be given by a village Panchayat, the matter would be speedily disposed of and with lesser cost. There will be no stamps, there will be no costs, there will be no bhatta, there will be no process fees. There will be nothing of that sort and the witnesses living in the same locality might come in and give their evidence. So the distinct advantage would be a speedy despatch of the disputes and there would be no costs in the bargain. Therefore I submit that this would be a valuable advantage to the people who are always burdened with unnecessary costs in litigation. At the same time I am alive to the difficulty which Government would find in having suitable and competent men to form these bodies. In my part of the country in about 50 per cent. of the villages there are factions, and in a village where there are factions it is very difficult for us to have suitable men, but I think in a factious village if you do not find men suitable to serve as members of the Panchayat, men could be found in the neighbouring village where there are no factions or in the neighbouring villages where they have no connection with the factions. But this principle which has been recognised, namely, the propriety and the usefulness of the village Panchayats, when it has been admitted on all hands, I think, should be brought into force as soon as possible and, as the Honourable Mr. CURTIS said that Government has already appointed Mr. Martin—one of its officers—to make the necessary enquiries into these matters, I think if a small committee is appointed to help him in the matter that would be desirable. I therefore heartily support the resolution which has been moved by the Honourable Mr. PATEL.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur VENKATESH SHRINIVAS NAIK:—May it please Your Excellency,—I have very great pleasure in supporting the resolution moved by my Hon'ble friend Mr. PATEL. He asks our Government, in his resolution, to take steps to constitute Village Panchayets in this Presidency in pursuance of the recommendations made by the Royal Commission upon decentralization and commended by the Government of India in their resolution of 1915 on Local Self Government and, if necessary, to appoint a committee of officials and non-officials to suggest and advise Government on the necessary methods of detail to be adopted for the purpose.

Villages in this country are the units of administration and the administrative reform in the organization of village life itself is most needed and is one of the most important and urgent duties which Government have to do. Since the administration of the country has been assumed by the centralized Government, the machinery of administration at the bottom has been much clogged by the minute Government control in every department. The position of the village officers, who are responsible to carry on the administration of the village, by their being required to be subordinate to so many minor officials and even petty clerks of different departments, has become so very deplorable that they command very little respect in the village. The villager generally has become helpless. The subordinate officials of Government in different departments dealing directly with individual villagers have disintegrated all corporate life in the village, while education and public spirit have not so far advanced as to make the villager assert his individual rights, and the local autonomy has entirely disappeared. The whole question was examined by the Royal Commission upon decentralization, who alike in the interests of decentralization and in order to associate the people with the task of local administration and thus give an impetus to the starting point in public life, have recommended that an attempt should be made to constitute and develop the village Panchayets for the administration of the village affairs. There is no doubt that these Panchayets once existed and played a most important part in the administration of the country and formed the lowest rung of the administrative ladder. The Commissioners have stated, in their report, that the Indian villages formerly possessed large degree of local autonomy. These Panchayets in olden days were the most useful institutions for improving the condition of the villagers and for giving them proper training in the affairs of Local Self Government. In olden days the villagers managed their affairs with maximum common sense and minimum technicalities, and possessed the greatest confidence of the community. The cohesive effect of the old communal system has to a great extent disappeared and the revivification of this most useful institution under the fostering care and guidance of our benign Government and the hearty co-operation of all the patriotic and thoughtful subjects of the country is most essential both in the interests of the well being of the people as well as in the interests of the good name of our administration The villagers like the idea of Panchayets and they venerate them as sacred and honour and obey their commands as if coming from the Divine Body. The very name itself is beloved to them and the colloquial saying "Panchamukhi Brahma" exists in almost all the Indian languages in some form or the other. I do not entirely agree and believe in the stock argument that the people are not yet ready and are not fit to exercise, if powers are given to the Panchayets. In rural villages even to-day there are certain headmen whom the illiterate mass venerate and in the case of social and caste disputes and even in some cases of civil and criminal disputes their decisions are blindly obeyed. Now that the corporate life of these Panchayets has been completely disintegrated by the individual dealings of the villagers with the subordinate officers of Government, and by the so called independence of each other, a single obstinate person in a village is enough to make the efforts of all the other people absolutely useless and since the break of even communial organization we very often find factions in almost every village and one or two mischievous touts can render the efforts of the remnants of Panchayets wherever they exist practically futile and nugatory. I do not think that the villagers in most cases are not capable enough to manage the affairs of the Panchayets although I must confess that illiteracy may hinder their progress considerably. All that is needed is a sufficient number of disinterested selfless hard-working educated non-officials willing to devote sufficient portion of their leisure towards the organization and working of the Panchayets. Where such people are available and are ready to realise the responsibility which Government even in the smallest degree would place on them, Government should help them to learn the art of taking interest in the protection of their village and in the administration of the country. Generally the villagers have an aptitude to work in their own villages and the success of Panchayets mostly depends upon the selection as Panchayetdars of persons of good moral character possessing confidence amongst the villagers. These Panchayets when established will have considerable educative effect in developing a sense of public duty amongst the villagers and greatly improve their moral and social character. The effect of the centralized administration has been hitherto to destroy all communal and social distinctions with the consequence that the public opinion has ceased to exercise any influence as an incentive to good behaviour or a check upon wrongful acts and the society itself will be driven into still more unhealthy working order.

I do not wish to detain this Council by an enumeration of the manifold advantages resulting from the revival of the Panchayet system since they are almost axiomatic, but will direct my gaze at our sister provinces as to what they have done in this direction. In the Madras Presidency and in United and Central Provinces the question has long been taken up and they have advanced a great deal ahead of us in the formation of the Panchayets. The other provinces also I believe have discussed the matter seriously and our Government with the reputation of being a progressive one should remain behind the race in grappling so important a subject does not at all seem befitting the reputation we have earned up till now and therefore I earnestly appeal to Your Excellency's Government to take the matter urgently on hand and make a beginning. An examination of the whole machinery of the Government with a view to see how much of the work of the subordinate officers may safely be decentralized and entrusted to the Panchayets is most important and is urgently needed in the beginning. This question cannot thoroughly be gone into and sifted except by a committee of officials and non-officials with the experience of village life and their habits, such as is suggested by my friend in the resolution. The Government of India also have said in their resolution that these things are to be done as far as possible in consultation with the people and the idea of appointing a committee is not a suggestion in any way violating the principles laid down by the Supreme Government in their resolution.

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMAT.—Your Excellency,—In rising to support the resolution which is before the Council, I wish to say only a few words. I take the opportunity of telling the Council that in December last I happened to give notice of a similar resolution which I wished to move and the Honourable Mr. PATEL had also given a similar notice. We were then told that Government already had in their hands a Panchayet Bill and so I withdrew that resolution. I had looked into this matter at that time and I wish to draw the attention of the Council to the fact that it is not only the Decentralization Commission that has recommended village Panchayets and the Government of India have endorsed that view, but there is another province which has taken a step further the example of which I wish to quote, namely the United Provinces. Government there appointed a similar committee to the one which the Honourable Mr. PATEL wants to have, and that Committee went exhaustively into the whole question and now I suppose a similar Bill is being passed there. I have in my hands a copy of the report of that Committee. I think this fact supports the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S contention that there is a good deal of scope for enquiry for a mixed Committee.

I am not one of those who entirely agree in thinking that the whole Panchayat institution should be revived in its old form, and I very much doubt whether it will suit the present times and conditions of a modern village. But I think there is a case for enquiry, and the points to be exhaustively gone into are so many that before Government finally draft out a Bill I think it would be advisable if they take the non-official members into their confidence and thresh out certain points before the actual Bill is drafted. At present what we know of the subject on behalf of Government is only this, that the Governor in Council has decided to prepare two separate Bills—one dealing with civil jurisdiction and the other with the administration of criminal justice. These measures are still under consideration. The Committee appointed in the United Provinces went into various questions a few of which I might cite for the sake of example; the questions are whether a single village or a group of villages should be the unit; how many members should constitute a Panchayet, five or more; whether that Panchayet should be appointed solely by the Collector or whether there should be a sort of general election in the village, though not with all the paraphernalia of electoral lists and voting boxes and all those sorts of things; then with regard to jurisdiction, whether we should have concurrent jurisdiction or whether it should be absolutely exclusive; then again with regard to the question of procedure, whether the procedure should be simple, whether the record should be kept in as short and simple a manner as possible, or whether it should be exceedingly technical or elaborate as in the ordinary course. Then again there is the question whether to allow the village Panchayats to have some hand in the administration of sanitation or village education or whether they should have nothing to do with it. These are all things which require looking into, both from the official and non-official point of view. There are certain other points which are carefully and exhaustively dealt with in the United Provinces report with me, namely whether members of the Panchayats should be removeable at the instance of the Government; secondly whether there should be panels of juries as it were from which members of the Panchayats could be chosen for the occasion; that is whether the Panchayat should be a standing body or whether it should be constituted for any particular occasion; whether it should have powers to fine up to so many rupees or not. All these details have been very exhaustively dealt with by the United Provinces Committee. I therefore urge that if a similar committee is appointed here as required by the Honourable Mr. PATEL and if all the points that have been suggested are gone into, I think it would be showing a consideration for the suggestions and for the opinions of the non-official members of this Council. With these words I support the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—May it please Your Excellency,—I have very great pleasure in supporting the resolution moved by my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL. The resolution, my Lord, is a very modest one. It does not commit Government to any particular action. It only asks for the appointment of a committee in a matter of vital importance to the interests of the rural community. I have stated before that if local self-government has failed on our side, it has failed more on account of our having commenced at the top rather than at the bottom; in fact, if we had started with the village communities and if we had allowed the people to help themselves in matters of local self-government, it would have been a greater success than it has been at present. The District and Taluka Boards at present do spend a lot of money for administrative matters, but they cannot give actual relief to the majority of the villagers who pay for it. In fact, in matters of sanitation and of medical relief and in many cases even of education the villagers are left to themselves. In the matter of even petty disputes, petty civil causes and petty criminal cases they are compelled to have recourse to courts of law, where they have to spend time and money which are disproportionate to the matters to be disposed of. Even in the matter of police administration the initial responsibility rests with the village police, but little has been done to improve it. The village patels who are responsible for the investigation into crimes are known to be illiterate people and the powers given to them are far too wide. I think it would be much better in the interests of the people if we agree to appoint a small committee of select people to consider the question of reconstituting the old village Panchayats. We do not say what particular action should be taken, but when other presidencies, other provinces, have moved faster, we might also take a leaf from what they have done and see as to how far they have succeeded in several places, like Madras for instance, and what should be done in this direction here. I submit, therefore, that the resolution of my honourable friend should be accepted by the Council.

The Honourable Mr. LALLUBHAI SAMALDAS MEHTA:—Your Excellency,—This question was referred in 1912 in the speech made by the Honourable Mr. FAZULBHAI CHINOY, and Sir RICHARD LAMB in reply said that the matter was under the consideration of Government, and that the papers had then been passed on to the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL who was then in charge of the local board portfolio. Four years have passed since then without anything being done possibly due to the difficulties which the Honourable Mr. PATEL and the Honourable Mr. KAMAT suggested. One of the difficulties perhaps is whether village Panchayats should be given criminal powers or whether they should only be given the power of trying civil cases. The second question is about the exemption from the Stamp Act; if plaints are not to be stamped under the Stamp Act, how are the expenses to be met. All these questions must be considered. We have also been told that a special officer has been appointed to consider not only the question of village Panchayats, but to suggest the best method of co-ordinating the villages with the taluka local boards and the district local boards.

All these matters for which a special officer has been appointed will be required to be gone through. The question now is, as the Honourable Mr. PATEL suggests by his resolution, that village Panchayats should be started in selected areas. The Honourable Mr. PATEL wants a committee. Instead of doing that I beg to suggest that the experiment may well be tried in villages where there are co-operative societies. People in those villages have had experience in managing their affairs in one matter, and they may well be entrusted with powers under a Village Panchayat Act. I am in favour of the first portion of the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S resolution but not in favour of second, and I would like to move an amendment, namely that the second portion of the resolution be dropped, because so far as that portion of the resolution goes, the Honourable Mr. PATEL himself has doubts about the necessity of it. He says in the second part of the resolution "and if necessary a mixed committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to suggest and advise Government on the necessary methods of detail to be adopted for the purpose." This shows that the Honourable Mr. PATEL himself is not quite sure of its necessity. If the resolution as it stands be accepted the preliminary work, which the officer specially appointed for this purpose is doing, would perhaps be somewhat hampered as the Honourable Mr. PATEL himself says that the work might be delayed by the appointment of a committee. It is better that all this work should be done by one man who should go through all these details and who if he thinks it necessary will surely consult non-official opinion, either of the members of this Council or of the local people. But for the present I would ask the Honourable Mr. PATEL to accept my amendment that all the words from "and" in line 4 of the resolution to the end be dropped.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I do not accept the amendment.

The Honourable Mr. LALLUBHAI SAMALDAS MEHTA:—Your Excellency,—I move my amendment that the second portion of the resolution as pointed out by me be dropped.

The Honourable Mr. GHULAM MUHAMMAD walad Khan Bahadur WALI MUHAMMAD BHURGRI:—Your Excellency,—I want to move a further amendment that the words "if necessary" in line 5 of the original resolution proposed by the Honourable Mr. PATEL be dropped.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I do not want to trouble the Council with the discussion of the Honourable Mr. BHURGRI'S amendment, and I therefore accept it and would move my resolution as amended, deleting the words "if necessary."

The Honourable Mr. BHURGRI:—Your Excellency,—The object of the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S resolution is that there should be co-operation between officials and non-officials, otherwise early steps could not be taken. The main object of the resolution is this, that before Government finally moves a Bill they should take into their confidence the non-official opinion and discuss with the non-officials their views. I am therefore very sorry that the Honourable Mr. PATEL should ever have thought of inserting the words "if necessary."

With these words I move my amendment.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency.—I can speak on the amendment of the Honourable Mr. LALLUBHAI and I therefore rise to oppose his amendment.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. I do not think the Honourable Member has got the right of speaking. He has got the right of reply only. The Honourable Member can speak with my permission, no doubt, but I think that if he gets the right of reply it will be sufficient for him.

The Honourable Dewán Bahádur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE:—Your Excellency,—We understand from the Honourable Mr. LALLUBHAI that the matter referred to by the Honourable Mr. PATEL has been under the consideration of Government for some time. He told us that it has been under consideration since 1912 and that at present an officer of Government has been specially deputed to report upon this question after consideration of all the points raised in the report of the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE'S Committee. I think, Sir, that after the report of the special officer is published, there will be time to consider whether the proposed Committee should be appointed. Otherwise the proposed Committee will be considering matters which have been already considered by the previous officers of Government and by the present special officer. Therefore I think it would be desirable to wait until we have the report of the special officer in our hands after he completes his enquiry.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency,—May I ask whether Mr. Martin is appointed to make a report or to draft a Bill.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Mr. Martin who is appointed as special officer in this connection is getting all particulars with regard to the franchise of the taluka local boards and district local boards and he will inform Government by report or otherwise and he will assist in getting out a Bill on the whole question.

The Honourable Dewán Bahádur GODBOLE (continuing):—I think what I have said to the Council is confirmed by the remarks which have been made by His Excellency the President. Mr. Martin is making enquiries into these matters and I think we should not duplicate the enquiries. Let us wait till we get the report of Mr. Martin in our hands, and if we afterwards find it necessary that a special Committee should be appointed, then it will be time to appoint it as suggested by the Honourable Mr. PATEL. I am therefore going to vote against the proposition and also against the amendment that has been brought forward by the Honourable Mr. LALLUBHAI. I think it is premature to bring before the Council a motion of this sort until the report that is being prepared by Mr. Martin is in our hands.

The Honourable Mr. SIDDHANATH DHONDDEV GARUD:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the amendment proposed by Mr. Bhurgri. I do not think that the appointment of a Committee will be premature. Your Excellency's Government has already given an opportunity to the public and the non-official members of this Council to express their opinion upon the constitution of district and taluka local boards, and I think it is in the fitness of things that they should be allowed to record their views on this important question of village Panchayats. It will facilitate the work of the special officer if this public opinion is placed before him. This question has been before the public and before Government almost since 1910, and I think a Bill was also under preparation at about that time, and it was going to be placed in the time of Lord Sydenham before this Council. The consideration of this question has already taken much time, and I hope an effort will be made to place the views of the public and the opinions of a strong Committee before the Council as soon as practicable.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur GANESH KRISHNA SATHE :—Your Excellency.—I rise to support the amendment put forward by my Honourable friend Mr. LALLUBHAI SAMALDAS MEHTA. It may strike my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL as to how I oppose his resolution. In the first place I do not wish to enter into the question as to the necessity for the revival of the institution of village Panchayats, because I find from the resolution which Government have issued in 1915 that the last paragraph of the resolution says " with regard to that portion of the resolution which deals with village organization the Governor in Council has decided to prepare two separate bil s in place of the existing draft of the Village Panchayat Bill, the one dealing with the question of civil jurisdiction and the other providing for village administration. These measures are still under consideration ", and further than this the Local Board Committee though it was not authorized to deal with the matter have made certain suggestions in two paragraphs of their report. So it is quite evident that Government is alive to the necessity of the revival of the Village Panchayats and the matter has received the closest attention of Government. So as regards the first part of the resolution of the Honourable Mr. PATEL no further argument is necessary to convince Government of the reasonableness of it. As regards the second part of it, it is practically opposed by the Honourable Mr. LALLUBHAI when he asks to delete it. I may submit for the information of the Members of this Council that a Committee on such a complex question would not be useful to my mind. Firstly, because the conditions vary in different districts and I think that many members of this Council have read the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Decentralization about Village Panchayats and there they have stated that though it was found necessary to revive this institution still progress must be made cautiously in view of the fact that there are factions in villages and that there are other elements which do not really conduce to the well-being of such institutions. It is a matter of common knowledge that in the mofussil there are factions for one reason or another in small villages, and it will be necessary for Government to formulate union Panchayats or Panchayats in such form as would avoid the evil of the factious spirit entering into the administration of these institutions. In short let us have the report of the special officer who has been appointed and then it will be for the District Officers in consultation with those who are considered to be the representatives of the people of the district to see in what parts of the district such measures could be made applicable, and if they are to be made applicable to what extent they are to be made applicable. So to my mind it appears that a Committee at this stage instead of being of use would hamper the progress of the inquiry which Government is intending to make. I understand, or at least that is always the machinery of Government, that this officer who has been asked to look into the question will necessarily get the opinions of district officers and such representatives of the people as can enlighten him on the question. The village Panchayat question is one on which representatives of each district will have to say something peculiar to that district, and therefore a mixed committee of officials and non-officials as asked for by Mr. Patel will not advance the real cause which he advocates. The officer who is appointed of course will be at liberty to take the opinions of such people as wish or have a desire to make suggestions on points affecting the question of village Panchayats and there is nothing in the way of any one of us to make particular or general suggestions. So in my opinion a Committee is not required and I think a greater purpose will be served if our attention is concentrated to the efforts of organizing Panchayats for each district and for each taluka. The conditions vary materially and, therefore, a committee to enquire into the question for the whole Presidency would not be useful. I oppose the resolution of my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL so far as it asks for the appointment of a mixed committee

The Honourable Mr. PANDURANG ANANT DESAI :—Your Excellency,—I oppose the amendment of the Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI. The first part of the resolution does not admit of much discussion. The only thing that is desirable is that a committee of officials and non-officials should be appointed to suggest and advise Government in the measures to be adopted for the purpose. Government has already appointed its officer to make the necessary inquiry in this connection. The Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE says that it is no use to appoint a mixed committee consisting of Government officers and non-official members because he thinks the matter is very complicated. I say it is for that very reason, as the matter is very complicated, that it is better if instead of one head, four or five heads work together in order to decide the matter more satisfactorily. Therefore I say that, as the inquiry by the Government officer is in its initial stage, it is advisable that a committee of officials and non-officials should be appointed as soon as possible. If non-official members are appointed to this committee, the non-official view will be clearly placed before Government and I think the difficulty which has been pointed out by the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE has no substance in it. He says the local conditions of each district and each taluka are different. Well, the local conditions may be different, but if non-official members are appointed from these districts, they have better knowledge of the local conditions and they would be the proper persons to give their opinions, and I think if such a committee is appointed the matter would be very easy for Government to decide ultimately. Therefore I think the amendment which has been made by the Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI should not be adopted.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—May it please your Excellency,—I think Government may be grateful to Honourable Members for having raised and started this important question this afternoon.

If this Council will consider what has been said this afternoon, they will find that it proves to the hilt everything that I have said on behalf of Government this morning. The Honourable Mr. PATEL asks : "Why has not Government dealt with taluka local boards and panchayats? Government are insulting this presidency and are insulting its independent public opinion." I ventured to anticipate the objection knowing that it would be raised and I pleaded somewhat mildly that the question was rather a difficult one, as taluka local boards and panchayats might or might not exist side by side. There was the question moreover of notified area committees and of the committees of the district local boards and the constitution of the panchayats. All these questions were somewhat difficult and interdependent, and we wanted to see what was being done elsewhere particularly having regard to the fact that legislation has been passed in other provinces. What does the Honourable Mr. PATEL say? "Nonsense, Government are insulting the public opinion of this presidency."

Now, Sir, as regards the appointment of the committee proposed by this resolution, the Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI, I think, correctly summed up the position. About 5 years ago the Bombay Government sent up a somewhat elaborate Bill to the Government of India. It dealt with panchayats not only from the point of view of local self-government, sanitation and so forth, but also with questions of civil jurisdiction, and I think there were some provisions connected with the application of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The Government of India considered the Bill for some time. I think they took some exception to the elaborate nature of the provisions and sent the Bill back again. We have now appointed a special officer and Government have undertaken to examine, what I may call, the purely local self-government part of it with reference to matters ordinarily falling within the purview of municipal and local board administration. Well, Sir, that is an extremely complex task and why it is complex at the present moment will be seen from what I am going to say now. I notice from the Honourable Mr. PATEL's remarks that he has stated that important financial questions are involved in this matter. Members of this Council will have gathered this morning that the question of village panchayats was not specifically referred to Mr. Lawrence's committee. But that committee did, as a matter of fact, consider this question with the other questions and the Honourable Mr. PATEL himself, while deploring that the committee had not been instructed to consider it, dealt with it on a still greater length. Now the committee made certain definite proposals of a financial nature. The committee suggested, for instance, that tolls should be re-imposed. They suggested that the one-anna cess should be raised to two annas. They recommended the levy of house-tax, cess on excise and forest revenue. The Honourable Mr. PATEL, in the course of a lengthy minute of dissent, negatived every one of the suggestions with two exceptions. I would ask this Council to remember what the acceptance of this resolution necessarily involves, namely that if real business is meant it means a very large and substantial addition to the expenditure side of the budget and that money has to come from somewhere. Now I will read the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S opinion :—

The committee in paragraph 85 of their report request Government to assent to the proposition that self-taxation is necessary to the success of local self-government. Without disputing this proposition I should like to impress on the attention of Government the desirability of not associating local self-government with local taxation to any considerable extent and of the use of great discrimination in the selection of heads for such taxation. Local taxation on any conceivable object or on objects selected without careful inquiry is bound to make local self-government unpopular. I hope I shall not be misunderstood. I am not opposed to all local taxation. I recognise that circumstances beyond the control of the people have brought about a state of things in the administration of Local Boards which call for some additional local taxation. The point that I really desire to emphasise is, that the best interests of local self-government require that it should not be associated with excessive taxation and that the heads of taxation should be very carefully selected.

How did the Honourable Mr. PATEL apply these principles? If you constitute village panchayats, there are certain very limited items of revenue, one of them is the house-tax in the villages in which village panchayats may be established. That form of taxation is already in practice in Madras.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL, in his minute of dissent, goes on to say :—

"I cannot join in that recommendation * * * * * * in view of the express opinion recorded by the Royal Commission in this respect."

There is one other point. The suggestion of the committee to increase the one-anna local fund cess to two annas has also been condemned wholesale by the Honourable Mr. PATEL and the Honourable Mr. SATHE.

The third item, the re-imposition of tolls, is entirely disapproved by the Honourable Member. He considers it a retrograde measure. So that is gone.

Finally we come down practically to the cess on Abkari revenue, forest cess and subventions to local resources

Well, Sir, as regards the forest cess, even if it is accepted it is perfectly obvious that Government cannot raise the cess in Kanara and employ it at Sholapur were there are no forests. Forest cess must be spent where it is raised. Finally, there is Excise cess. It is the Excise cess which is the only form of taxation left to meet the requirements. Finally, Sir, the whole matter goes down to subventions from provincial revenue. Now, Sir, I think this Council will agree with me that any officer who sets himself down to try and estimate what subvention the provincial revenues can afford in the years to come after the war is over, will find his attempt a very difficult task indeed and until we know a little more what the balance of our provincial revenues is likely to be, it is no use trying to sketch out a big plan of operations of village panchayats. No, Sir. The method at present adopted seems to be the best. Government are endeavouring to collate as much as possible such information as is available and inquiries will be made from local sources, official and non-official, as to the best form which the panchayats shall take and also what system of raising revenue on their behalf can be adopted with the minimum of unpopularity. I think probably there can be no doubt that the system of raising house-tax and an optional increase of the one-anna cess will be eventually adopted. But of course local inquiry will be made first and it is better that it should be made by one officer than by a committee.

I have not gathered from the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S speech whether he wishes to include village panchayats established for judicial purposes in the purview of his resolution. Now anyhow I would suggest to him and to this Council that, to use a homely expression, there is no good biting off more than one can chew; that the problem connected with the municipal and local self-government in relation to the panchayats is quite sufficient to occupy one Secretariat and one set of heads burdened as they are with a good many other problems connected with the war that this Council will be well advised to use patience and to let the problems be tackled piecemeal.

For these reasons, Sir, I would ask the Council to reject this resolution.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I have heard with very great interest the speech of my Honourable friend Mr. CURTIS. He has pointed out to us the serious difficulties of this problem, and I entirely associate myself with the view expressed by him that the questions involved in the constitution of village panchayats are indeed very intricate. Now let us see how Government propose to satisfactorily solve them. It is officially admitted that some form of village panchayat has to be introduced into the rural areas of this presideney. Government say that they have appointed an officer, one Mr. Martin, for the purpose of preparing a draft Bill to be introduced into this Council. Now after hearing my friend the Honourable Mr. CURTIS and several speakers in support of and against my resolution, members of this Council, I have not the slightest doubt, will agree that the whole question of village panchayat requires to be thoroughly threshed out, not by an officer of Government, but by a committee of persons who have moved among the masses and who know really what is wanted. I do not know whether Mr. Martin is in touch with the masses or not. I have great respect for him. We have rubbed shoulders together for nearly a couple of months on the Local Board Committee, I have great regard for him, but I think this is a matter in which a few experienced officials and non-officials should put their heads together and discuss matters and come to a definite agreement on the various questions involved before any Bill is introduced into this Council. I have been vehemently attacked by my Honourable friend Mr. CURTIS on the ground that I have said nothing with regard to the financial difficulty that is likely to arise in connection with the formation of panchayats. Not only that, but he quotes in his speech my own minutes of dissent to show to this Council that I am opposed to the levy of house-tax in villages. Well, let me make it perfectly clear to this Council that when the matter of village panchayat was discussed by the members of the committee, I opposed it on the ground that Government had not authorised us to go into that question at all. The Chairman, Mr. Lawrence, as I have pointed out, wrote to Government asking them to empower the committee to go into the whole question of local self-government including the panchayats. Government, however, refused to do so and yet the committee thought of going into the question without consulting any witnesses on it. 292 witnesses were examined by the committee. In the questions formulated by the committee no question with regard to village panchayats found place, and yet the committee went out of its way and made a report on the desirability or otherwise of the establishment of village panchayats and the levy of house-tax and other taxes. In my minute of dissent I do not say that the taxation is not necessary. My Honourable friend Mr. CURTIS has conveniently omitted to read one or two words from my minute of dissent. He merely read that part of my minute of dissent where I have said "I cannot join in the recommendation of the committee about house-tax." I have further said that I cannot join in the recommendation because of the absence of any materials before the committee to support it. The committee had no materials before them to come to the conclusion that in any scheme for the formation of a village panchayat house-tax was a necessary thing. I was insisting all along, in the committee, that if we were going to make any recommendations in the matter of village panchayats in spite of the orders of Government to the contrary then we must ask the people, we must have their view as to what they think about it and we must record evidence. In my humble opinion, therefore, it was not right for the committee that they should have gone out of their way and made recommendations suggesting house-tax, etc. I dissented on the ground that there were no materials before the committee to justify them to record the conclusion that in the scheme for the formation of village panchayats house-tax was a necessary thing.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Will the Honourable Member please go on with the quotation?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Yes, certainly. "I cannot join in that recommendation 'in the absence of any materials before the committee to support it'"—words omitted by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS—"and in view of the emphatic opinion recorded by the Royal Commission in this respect." These are the two points on which I attacked the recommendation of the committee as regards house-tax. The Commissioners in their report on this point say "We consider it essential to the popularity and efficiency of the panchayat system that it should not be associated with any new form of local taxation, for the evidence shows that the imposition of taxation of this character has made such bodies as the existing unions and sanitary committees unpopular." So on the ground that there were no materials before the committee, as the committee had not examined a single witness on that question and on the further ground that there was the emphatic opinion already recorded by the Commissioners on Decentralisation I said that I would not join in their recommendation that there should be any taxation in the form of house-tax. The fact, however, remains that the question of village panchayat is so intricate and important that it is absolutely necessary that we should have a committee to go into it. My Honourable friend Rao Bahadur SATHE has just told us that the conditions in different areas vary so widely that it is difficult to see how a committee would serve any useful purpose. I say because the conditions in different areas vary that a committee should be appointed. How is one gentleman to ascertain the different conditions obtaining in different parts of the presidency and draft a Bill and place it before you. I say, your Excellency, that it is absolutely necessary that every representative of local boards in this Council as well as a couple of officials should be asked to serve on the committee which I propose should be appointed and they should be empowered to take evidence and make necessary recommendations. I think it is because the conditions, as my Honourable friend Rao Bahadur SATHE put it, vary that non-official opinion should be freely consulted. My Honourable friend Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE tells us "let us wait and let us have the report of Mr. Martin." Are we going to have that report in our hands before the Bill is introduced into this Council? Government does not say that the report of Mr. Martin would be published and non-official opinion invited thereon before the Bill appears on the Council agenda. So far as I understand the attitude of Government, it is this: Mr. Martin is appointed on special duty in connection with this business. He will prepare a draft Bill in the light of his experience and on such materials he could get hold of or collect. The Bill will then be before the Council. I am sure, the Bill so drafted will evoke a good deal of controversy in this Council. By this resolution we non-officials offer our co-operation to Government in order to enable them to deal with this difficult subject in a manner that would be satisfactory to the people as well as Government. I earnestly trust therefore that Your Excellency's Government will cheerfully accept that offer.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—While I agree with my Honourable Colleague that we have had a very interesting discussion of this matter of panchayats, I think it must be perfectly obvious to every Honourable Member of this Council that it is under the circumstances absolutely impossible for Government to accept the resolution as amended or in its original form. I am quite clear that my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL has brought forward this resolution as originally standing owing to his keenness and earnestness as regards local self-government, but I do wish to say to him that I wish that he had taken the suggestion that I made to him not very long ago, when I informed him that we were hard at work and endeavouring to work out the position of panchayats in the main scheme of local self-government, and that it would be, as I thought, a waste of the time of the Council to bring up this question now and suggest to Government that they should take executive action with regard to this matter. Let me inform him why we cannot do it. The Honourable Member wants us to appoint a committee of officials and non-officials to go into the question of panchayats. My answer to that is: Government some months ago appointed a special officer to go into the whole question, who will go about into the districts and get all information from official and non-official sources, and we consider in the circumstances that that is a better plan in order to get the necessary information. Further than that, Government in years gone by did get much information with regard to the question of panchayats for, as Honourable Members are aware, a Panchayat Bill was under consideration by the Government only a few years ago. So there is a considerable amount of information collected already on the question with regard to panchayats. I must say that I entirely agree with the remarks of my Honourable friend Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE, when he suggested—and I should have thought that Honourable Members might think it a reasonable suggestion—that it is putting Government into an extraordinary difficulty to bring up this question of local self-government at the present time when Honourable Members know perfectly well that Government are going closely into the matter, with the object of bringing out a Bill on the whole question of local self-government for the full discussion of every Honourable Member of this Council at the earliest opportunity. Now, my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL has raised another point. He wants to know whether the special officer appointed, Mr. Martin, is going to produce a report and whether that report is going to be sent round to Honourable Members. Does he propose that the Council should have an academic discussion on that report? This is surely a matter of procedure. The report is for the information of Government in drafting their Bill which will be brought before the Legislative Council, and Honourable Members will have full opportunity of discussing it when it comes under debate. I do say to my Honourable friend with regard to both his resolution and two or three others which are on the paper, although Government felt bound to admit them, that it is very difficult—and I think he must realise that we are doing our very best to produce this general Bill on local self-government—if we have these resolutions continually brought up which, under the circumstances, it is absolutely impossible for us to accept, because our mind is not clear as to what the particular line of policy should be.

Now, with regard to the amendment proposed by my Honourable friend Mr. LALUBHAI, the same difficulty arises. I must inform him in reply that he suggests to Government at this moment a definite step.

The Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI SAMALDAS :—I do not say that it should be done at once.

"This Council recommends that, in pursuance of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on decentralization, which were commended by the Government of India in their recent resolution on local self-government, steps be taken to constitute village panchayats in this Presidency in select areas."

I can only take the amendment as it reads, and again I give him exactly the same answer. A Bill is being worked out and we cannot possibly agree to take any steps to establish village panchayats in this Presidency, for the reason that a Bill is being worked out, which we hope to put before the Honourable Members of this Council, dealing with the whole question of local self-government. I think it must be obvious to Honourable Members, and I hope they will support my view, that neither the resolution as amended nor the resolution itself are acceptable to Government. I will put the amendment first to the Honourable Members, and then the original resolution.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost.

The original resolution of the Honourable Mr. PATEL was then put to the vote and lost, 18 members voting for it and 27 against it. The Council divided as follows :—

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. Before we go on with the ordinary business of the day, I want to inform my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL that in pursuance of a promise I gave him that Government would take an early opportunity of considering the point he raised yesterday, we have been considering the matter this morning and we have come to the conclusion that he has raised a point of substance and of some difficulty.

With regard to the exact reading of rule 28, sub-rules (2) and (6), of the rules for the conduct of Council business, and rule 1, sub-rule (3), of the instructions regarding legislation in Local Councils, it is impossible for Government at such a short notice to decide exactly what is the correct interpretation of these rules. But in order to facilitate as far as possible the desire of my friend the Honourable Mr. PATEL to go forward with his Bill, I propose to suspend, under rule 45 of the rules for the conduct of Council business, sub-rules (2) and (6) of rule 28, and I would suggest to my Honourable friend that under section 80, sub-section (2), of the Government of India Act, 1915, he should apply for leave to introduce his Bill, and Government will forward it to the Secretary of State and after the two months that are necessary have elapsed will consider whether sanction for the introduction of the Bill should be given.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I am very much obliged to your Excellency.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 2, the Honourable Mr. PATEL:—

This Council recommend that His Excellency the Governor in Council may be pleased to take steps to have at least one specia Training College for primary school teachers and mistresses esta blished in the City of Bombay at an early date.

COUNCIL BUSINESS RULES: TRAINING COLLEGE FOR THE BOMBAY CITY: TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; the President; Mr. G. S. Curtis.]

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—With regard to this Resolution I have to observe that my friends the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE, the Honourable Mr. CHUNILAL V. MEHTA, the President of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, and myself had an interview with the member in charge of the education portfolio and he assured us that Government were seriously considering the whole question about the desirability of starting more training colleges for the training of teachers. If by the next meeting of this Council I am not satisfied with what Government does in that behalf, I propose to move my Resolution then. I therefore request your Excellency to allow me to postpone the consideration of this Resolution.

Resolution by leave postponed.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 3, the Honourable Mr. PATEL.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—The Resolution that I have the honour to move reads thus:

This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the number of elective members on all municipalities constituted under section 10 (1) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, or, in the alternative on such of them as enjoy the privilege of selecting a President by a two-thirds majority shall, in future, be not less than two-thirds of the whole number of Councillors.

Your Excellency, we had some very interesting discussion on one branch of local self-government yesterday. To-day I propose to deal with another branch of local self-government in this Presidency which is equally important, viz., Municipality.

My Lord, only the other day your Excellency spoke of the Bombay Presidency as the foremost of the Indian Provinces and we all accepted the compliment with cheers. In these civilized days, is not the advancement of Political Institutions on democratic lines regarded as the test of advancement in civilization, my Lord?

It is not then a legitimate cause for complaint for the people of this Presidency that it should be the last, the very last in local self-government? Bombay is behind every important province in British India, behind the Central and North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and even Burma, the youngest of all Indian Provinces.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—May I ask the Honourable Member the details for his last statement?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL (continuing):—In response to my Honourable friend Mr. CURTIS' invitation and with the Council's permission I shall give here a short history of the question in this Presidency so far as it bears on this Resolution, which I am endeavouring to put before the Council and compare the position of Bombay with those of other provinces. My Lord, the figures I have to give may be somewhat wearisome but your Excellency will find that history interesting as giving the Council a striking illustration of the masterly methods which the executive adopt in order to render a Resolution of the Home Government or Government of India dead letter when they feel that it runs counter to their cherished traditions.

COUNCIL BUSINESS RULES: TRAINING COLLEGE FOR THE BOMBAY CITY: TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES.

[Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; Mr. Curtis; the President.] [16TH MARCH 1917.]

According to the Review of the District Municipal Reports published last year, the total number of Municipalities in this Presidency is 156. Of this number as many as 45 are constituted under section 14 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, and most of them consist entirely of nominated members. The constitution of the remaining 111 Municipalities is governed by section 10 (1) of the Act. Of these, 23 are City Municipalities, and I understand the number of elected councillors on each of them is two-thirds of the whole number. There then remain 88 Municipalities constituted under section 10 (1) of the Act with half elected and half nominated members. The purpose of the first part of this resolution is to raise the proportion of elected members from half to two-thirds in respect of these 88 Municipalities.

My Lord, Lord Ripon's memorable Resolution of the 18th May 1882 desired that non-official members of local bodies should feel that they have real power and real responsibility. To secure this object, the Bombey District Municipal Act was passed in 1884. The clause [now section 10 (1)] dealing with the constitution was the subject of much controversy and it was urged that in order to give Municipalities some real independence it was necessary that the elective members should represent a marked majority of the Board. It was, however, pointed out that the elective minimum had only been fixed, and that the maximum might by executive order, be the entire Board. It is now 32 years since these hopes were held out to us, and yet to-day there is not a single Municipality with that maximum nor does there exist any with three-fourths elective members. Excepting City Municipalities which number only 23 out of a total of 156, there is not a single Municipality with even a bare elective majority. Now let us examine this question in relation to the state of things in other provinces in India. In Punjab, though no proportion is laid down in the Act, as a matter of fact, under the Rules, the elective system is in force nearly in every Municipality the exceptions being very rare and the elected members are not less than two-thirds of the total number.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Under what rule?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—May I invite the attention of the Honourable Member to the commentary under section 10 of the District Municipal Act by Mr. Cumming:

It is also expressly provided that no alternation in the constitution of the Municipalities having the effect of reducing the proportion of elected members can be made except (1) in compliance with the request of a majority of the electors for the time being or (2) for some reason Government may deem such alternation necessary in public interest.

The N.-W. P. Act gives partly appointed and partly elected members but says that the number of appointed members shall not exceed $\frac{1}{4}$ of the total.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Does the Honourable Member know what is the condition of Municipalities in the Punjab.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I do not profess to know that, Your Excellency.

The Madras Act provides that in Municipalities where members are partly elected, their number shall be $\frac{3}{4}$ of the whole unless Government otherwise directs. Under the Bengal Act of 1884 the proportion of elected Councillors is $\frac{3}{4}$. I shall read to you the appropriate sections of some of these Acts.

The Madras District Municipal Act IV of 1884.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel.]

Section 13.—In any Municipality where the Municipal Councillors are partly appointed by election, the number of the persons so appointed shall unless the Governor in Council otherwise directs be $\frac{3}{4}$ of the whole number of the Municipal Councillors.

United Provinces Act 1 of 1900.

Section.—Subject to the provisions of the next following section there shall be established for each Municipality a Board having authority over that Municipality and consisting of (a) So many elected members as may be determined in manner prescribed, representing wards of the Municipality or particular classes of the inhabitants and

(b) Such person or persons (if any) not exceeding in number one-fourth of the Board, as the Local Government may, subject to the rules made under section 187, appoint by name or by virtue of office in this behalf.

The Burma Municipal Act III of 1898.

Section 7.—There shall be constituted for each Municipality under this Act a committee having authority thereover and consisting of (a) so many inhabitants of the Municipality as may be determined by the Local Gove rnmen', elected in manner next hereinafter prescribed to represent wards of the Municipality or classes of the inhabitants and

(b) Such persons (if any) not exceeding in number $\frac{1}{4}$ of the committee, as the Local Government may appoint by name or by office in this behalf:

Provided that

(c) when the circumstances of the Municipality are in the opinion of the Local Government such as to require it, the Local Government may appoint a larger proportion of or all the members of the committee and

(II) When any places on the committee are required to be filled by election and a sufficient number of members is not elected the Local Government may fill by appointment the places so left vacant.

The Bengal Municipal Act III of 1884.

Section 14.—Two-thirds of the number of Councillors of each Municipality fixed by such notification shall be elected as hereinafter provided by male persons resident within the limits of such Municipality who shall have attained the age of 21 years.

The remainining one-third of such Commissioners shall be appointed either by name or by official designation by the Local Government immediately after the result of the election hereinbefore mentioned shall have been notified to the Local Government and such appointment shall be deemed to have been made on the date on which such election takes place.

The whole question was carefully examined by the Decentralisation Commission in 1908 and while recommending that Municipal Councils should ordinarily contain a substantial elective majority the Commissioners on the actual figures for 1906-07 found that the percentage of the elective members in the Bombay Municipal Councils was much lower than that in the United Provinces, Central Province Two Bengals, Punjab and Madras. One of the footnotes to paragraph 849 of the Report, which gives this percentages is indeed very nteresting. It says "the Bombay Government have, however, we understand ecently ruled that two-thirds of the members should be elected". My Lord, I ave no means of knowing how, why and by whom the Commissioners were so nformed. I know of no Resolution of the Bombay Government in such unre- tricted terms. If it were a fact we should have had most of our Municipalities with two-thirds elected members long ago and to-day my Resolution would have been for the grant to them of three-fourths elected majority. I looked up all the Resolutions on the subject, of course such as are open to the public for 1907, 1908 and 1909; and I found that in 1909 Government published on this subject the Resolution No. 4614, dated 16th July, General Department, paragraph 2 of that Resolution states :—"The Governor in Council has, therefore, decided that in future as a general rule two-thirds of the members of the District Municipality shall be elected". If the Resolution had stopped there it would have been in accordance with the foot-note referred to above. But the Resolution further says :—"This rule (1) applies for the present only to Municipal areas with a population of at least 15,000 and (2) is subject to any exclusions, which may be recommended by the Commissioners, on special grounds" The Council will see that this Resolution reads excellent. But the sequel will show that the tail wags the head—the exceptions swallow up the rule. When the draftsman drafted the Resolution he should have known that there are only 38 Municipalities out of a total of 156 in the Presidency with a population of over 15,000 inhabitants. The first exception, therefore, removes at one stroke from the operation of the general rule contained in the Resolution, 118 Municipalities. Of the remaining 38 the number of City Municipalities is 23. There are thus left only 15 District Municipalities with a population of 15,000 and over. The Council may perhaps be expecting that the rule had been put in operation at least in their case. But alas, No? The well known solicitude of the Commissioners for the dumb millions under their paternal care seems to have compelled them to exclude every one of the Municipal areas under them from the privilege. Does not this instance, my Lord, explain why the non-official members invariably fight shy of proposals in this Council to leave matters in which popular privileges are involved to the discretion of executive authorities. However that may be, the redeeming feature of the Resolution of 1908 is contained in the words "for the present". They read as if Government had then decided to extend the general rule of two-thirds elective majority to all the District Municipalities in the Presidency in the near future. But as might have been expected from what I said no action has been taken so far in this direction and the general rule, therefore, remained for all practical purposes a dead letter.

Now what do I now propose by this Resolution. I do not demand what Lord Ripon intended we ought to get nor do I ask Government to go as far as Lord Minto and Lord Morley did on this point. I have not even asked your Excellency's Government to give us at once what the Decentralisation Commissioners recommended. Having regard to the past history of this question, I could not venture so far. I only want your Excellency's Government to grant two-thirds and not three-fourths elective majority to 88 and not to all District Municipalities in the Presidency. The Resolution in fact, leaves untouched as many as 45 District Municipalities in the Presidency. I merely ask your Excellency's Government to carry into effect at any rate to some extent, in substance and in spirit, the general rule of the Resolution of 1908 passed very soon after the Commissioners on Decentralisation had finished their investigation in this Presidency. Before I conclude my observation on the first part of the Resolution, I should like to quote here the views of the Government of India on this question embodied in their recent Resolution on local self-government. They say in paragraph 6 of their letter to Local Governments :—

"6. The Commission recommended that Municipal Boards should ordinarily be constituted on the basis of a substantial elective majority and that nominated members should be limited to a number sufficient to provide for the due representation of minority and official experience. This recommendation has already been adopted in several provinces, and is generally accepted by Local Government, and the Government of India subject to the proviso that the principle should in places, where its success is doubtful, be introduced gradually and after experiment, in selected Municipalities."

I trust this Council will not say that the success of the elective majority is doubtful in this the most enlightened of all the provinces of India.

I shall now take the second part of this Resolution. I shall not detain you for more than a couple of minutes. If the first part of the Resolution is carried, this part will go out. If not as an alternative I shall have to ask the Council to accept this part at least.

There are several Municipalities in the Presidency. I am not in a position to give you the exact number which enjoy the privilege of selecting their President by the vote of two-thirds of the total number of Councillors. Some of them have two-thirds elected majority on them, while the remaining consist of half elected and half nominated members. This alternative proposal merely seeks to secure two-thirds majority for this latter class of Municipalities. I piously believe that the withholding of the two-thirds elective majority when they have been granted the privilege of selecting their President by that majority is an innocent oversight. It often happens in the case of these Municipalities that popular candidates fail to secure two-thirds majority for the office of the President for the simple reason that the Board has not two-thirds elected members on it. A nominated member also fails to secure two-third majority for similar reasons. This naturally gives the District Officer his opportunity to pitch-fork his own man into the office. The net result is an official President with only bad blood and local feuds for the share of the citizens. If Government consider a Municipality fit for selecting its President I respectfully submit it ought to consider it also fit for two-thirds elective majority. Otherwise the privilege of selecting a President by a two-third majority will always remain a mere make-believe.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Does the Honourable Member wish to put the Resolution in two parts? If he chooses to put the Resolution down as one Resolution, it should be put to the meeting as one solid Resolution. For the future I hope he will remember that he must put down two separate Resolutions in such cases. Now how far does the Honourable Member wish the first part of his Resolution to go?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—The first part goes as far as the figure "1901."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Then I had better inform Honourable Members that they should discuss that Resolution first and then the other

The Honourable Ráo Bahádur VENKATESH SHRINIVAS NAIK:—My Lord,—My friend the Honourable Mr. PATEL asks in this Resolution that the constitution of the District Municipalities in this Presidency should be two-thirds by election and one-third by nomination. Section 10 of the District Municipal Act does not, in any way, prescribe a bar to the constitution of our Municipalities as suggested by my friend. On the other hand, it lays a limitation upon the number of nominated persons and upon that of the salaried servants of Government. It is always open for these Municipalities to show satisfactorily to the Government that they are deserving of the right of elective majority and that right, I am sure, will be extended to them, however small the Municipalities may be. Out of 152 permanent Municipalities in this Presidency, 35 have, according to the last official census, a population of more than 15,000, 28 more than 10,000, 21 more than 7,000, 35 more than 5,000, and 33 less than 5,000 souls. These 35 Municipalities with more than 15,000 population are entitled to the privilege of being notified as City Municipalities under section 181 of the District Municipal Act. As pointed out by my friend Mr. PATEL just now Government, as far back as 1908, have offered, in their Resolution No. 4614 in the General Department dated 16th July 1908 all the District Municipalities in this Presidency the privilege of returning two-thirds of their members by election and have said in that Resolution, that, in the first instance, the rule should be made applicable to the 35 places which have more than 15,000 population. It was open to these 35 Municipalities during these 9 years to only apply to the Government for being notified as City Municipalities and get the privilege. As for the smaller Municipalities also, Government in a subsequent Resolution in the General Department, viz., No. 6176 dated 15th October 1908 on a further reference in the matter by the Commissioner, Northern Division, have confirmed and renewed the offer subject to the condition that in the case of smaller Municipalities an executive officer is appointed and that such officer is a servant of Government. From the latest taxation report of the Municipalities in this Presidency it is found that upto 31st March 1915, out of 35 bigger Municipalities, only 20, viz., 4 in Northern Division, 10 in Central Division, 3 in Southern Division and 3 in Sind so far have availed themselves of the offer. Out of the remaining 15 Municipalities subsequently during these two years I believe that six more Municipalities, viz., 4 in Local District and 2 in Southern Division including Hubli with a population of 61,440, being the seventh Municipal town in point of population in the whole of this Presidency, and was declared by the Act itself as City Municipality in 1901, have cared to avail themselves of the opportunity of securing elective majority only during this and last year although the privilege was offered as far back as 1908. This clearly shows that more than 25 per cent. of these big Municipalities, selected to be classed as City Municipalities, and choosen for special privileges, have not yet cared to secure higher elective rights. When these are the state of things in respect to bigger Municipalities, and when Government have extended the right of returning two-thirds of their members by election to all the Municipalities in this Presidency, and have left the utilization of the offer at the option of even smaller Municipalities, I have only to ask this Council to consider whether a hard and fast rule should be laid down in respect to the proportion of elected and nominated members and the elective majority forced upon even 117 smaller Municipalities against their will. Does not the question raised by this Resolution practically rest more with the Municipalities themselves than with Government who, since they have offered the privilege 9 years before, are more eager to entrust the management to the Municipalities themselves and reduce the official influence. Many of the 117 smaller Municipalities in this Presidency can be classed as mere big rural villages. It must be admitted that, in smaller places say with a population of less than 10,000, we find very few people who are educated and with self-sacrificing spirit unless such places are situated in the suburbs or near big places. If elective majority is forced upon such small places even against their will, the constitution of these Municipalities will not be as healthy and efficient as my friend the Honourable Mr. PATEL expects or hopes them to be. Now if we analyse the constitution of these smaller Municipalities, we generally find that they mostly consist of 12 members, in a few cases they are a few more or a few less, and if, as suggested by my Honourable friend, two-thirds election is forced upon them, 8 members will have to be returned by election and four by nomination. My friend cannot but admit that the advice and co-operation of certain officers of Government such as the Mamlatdar, the medical officer and in some cases the Public Works officer, are desirable for the better administration of these smaller Municipalities, which are nearly 77 per cent. of the Municipalities of this Presidency. Your Excellency in Council after nominating these experts will have very little or practically no latitude to bring in the representation of the minorities

COUNCIL BUSINESS RULES: TRAINING COLLEGE FOR THE BOMBAY CITY: TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Rao Bahadur Venkatesh Shrinivas Naik; Mr. F. G. Pratt.]

if they are not returned in the election, and to secure also to these Municipalities the benefits of the experience if certain non-official gentlemen of merits who for diverse reasons may not like to take part in the elections. From the various circulars and resolutions issued by Government from time to time, and the policy more than once declared by both the Imperial and Provincial Governments in this respect, it is quite clear that Government are not opposed to the principle of elective majority in the constitution of the Municipalities and on the other hand they are in its favour and have left at the free will of Municipalities whether to avail themselves of the privileges or not. It must not be understood that I am opposed to introducing this progressive principle of elective majority, but I rather feel constrained to strike a dissenting note from my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL, inasmuch as that instead of making a hard and fast rule and force the elective majority even upon smaller Municipalities against their will and where we do not find suitable persons to manage their affairs satisfactorily, your Excellency in Council may be left unfettered to exercise your discretion in individual cases. My humble submission to this Council is to consider whether Government should not proceed with caution in rural areas. Section 10 of the District Municipal Act gives wide powers to His Excellency in Council and the offer made in the two Resolutions issued in 1908 in respect of returning members two-thirds by election are liberal enough and, therefore, I am of opinion that we should not lay any further constraint upon these powers by prescribing the limitations. Individual cases can be considered, and if they prove themselves deserving, your Excellency's Government should not, and, I am sure, will not, refuse to grant more rights and privileges.

Now, my Lord, looking to the recent taxation reports of the Municipalities, I cannot but observe that 32 Municipalities in this Presidency, viz., 5 in Northern Division, 7 in Central Division, 1 in Southern Division and 19 in Sind, do not at all exercise the privilege of electing any members in their constitution. Unless many of them are superseded for bad management, I must appeal to your Excellency's Government to consider why such a large number of Municipalities remain without exercising elective right. In the case of 2 Municipalities in Central Division and two in Southern Division there exists a disproportion exceeding the limits allowed for nomination by the Act and your Excellency's Government, I am sure, is ready to correct these defects, as they have been brought to your Excellency's notice, at the time of their next constitution. In the case of Yeola Municipality in Nasik District, the number of nominated members is 7 and that of elected 12 and in the absence of any special reasons, I do not think that your Excellency's Government will grudge to give two more elective seats to this Municipality so as to make the two-third representation by election complete.

The Honourable Mr. F. G. PRATT:—Your Excellency,—I have done so much work side by side with the Honourable Mover of this Resolution, especially in matters of local self-government, both in a general and particular way but I am sorry that I have got to get up to-day and attack his proposals. During the past twelve months we rubbed shoulders together on the Local Board Committee and I learnt to understand and appreciate his enthusiasm in the cause of local self-government and the tremendous industry with which he labours at any problem in which he is interested. Then, Sir, coming to the immediate question now before the Council about the two-third majority I think the Council must be getting weary of this everlasting insistence of the Honourable Mr. PATEL on the exact proportion between nominated and elected members on the Municipalities. I think the Honourable Mr. PATEL is making far too much of this point. To hear him speak one would think that the whole progress of local self-government or the whole failure or success of the municipalities depended upon this one constitutional point of the exact proportion between the elected and the nominated members in municipalities? Well, Sir, I do not minimise or depreciate the importance of this question itself but I submit there are a great many other considerations which are far more important than this for the development of local self-government; there are a great many factors which are far more important than this in determining whether any municipal administration in a particular area is going to be successful or not. I do not deny that it is important that rate-payers should have a fair voice in electing their representatives to voice their views on municipalities but at the same time I do submit that for reasons which are very well known, and have been stated so often that it is unnecessary to repeat them, that a reasonable proportion of nominated non-officials is a desirable thing, for many reasons, on these municipalities. Experience shows that the nominated members do serve a useful purpose and do perform useful functions, and I think I may fairly point to the fact that I had the pleasure of nominating the Honourable Member himself on the Bandra Municipality. I did so, if I may repeat the Honourable Member's own phrase, "in my paternal solicitude for the dumb millions committed to my charge." I am quite sure that these dumb millions have found a very articulate gentleman to make up for their deficiencies. Well, Sir, we have the Honourable Member today enlarging upon this particular ratio of representation. He admitted frankly that assoon as he has got the two-thirds or 66 per cent. which he now demands he will go on to ask for 75 per cent., and as soon as he gets the 75 per cent., I have no doubt, he will go on to 90 per cent. in the hope of reaching his ultimate goal of 100 per cent. That appears to me to be his one ideal and I do not doubt that he candidly and genuinely believes that he will reach the millenium when he has attained his one object of reducing the number of nominated members until they reach the vanishing point. With regard to this, I should like to point to the fact that in the Bombay Municipality which consists of 72 members, out of 72, 16 are nominated by Government, say on the whole 22 per cent., and that state of things has continued since the year 1888. We have never heard—I don't think this Council has ever heard—that the Bombay Corporation harbours a rankling sense of injustice or feels that local self-government has been degraded or has come to a a deadlock on account of the inclusion of this element of 22 per cent. nominated members amongst its councillors. Not a word has been heard for the last 29 years from 1888 when that Act was passed up till now. Now, I submit, Sir, that the reason of that is that the members of the Bombay Corporation are practical bussiness-men and they realise that those nominated members do serve a useful purpose and their presence on the board is not the least incongruous with the very full and ample development of autonomy in the affairs of the Bombay City Corporation. Well, Sir, we have heard just now from the Honourable Member, who last spoke, the advantages of an elastic system in this matter. I submit the framing of the present provision in section 14 of the Municipal Act is elastic. It is open, as the law stands now, to adopt the proportions to conditions which may prevail in municipalities of varying advancement all over the enormous area of this Presidency. The Honourable Member has mentioned those municipalities to which section 14 of the District Municpal Act applies. Section 14 of the District Municipal Act provides for a special constitution in those municipalities to which on account of smallness of the district and backward state of the inhabitants or other exceptional reasons, the ordinary provisions of the Act are unsuitable. Well, there are a great many of such municipalities with regard to which the Honourable Mr. PATEL would propose to this Council to put all of them absolutely on the same footing; no matter whether the municipality is covered by section 14 or is an advanced municipality with 15,000 inhabitants, he would have all of them treated exactly in the same way.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—That is not my resolution. My resolution deals with municipalities constituted under section 10 (1) and not section 14 of the District Municipal Act.

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. F. G. Pratt; Mr. Patel; the President; Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas.]

The Honourable Mr. PRATT:—I beg the Honourable Member's pardon. I drop that point and pass on to the next. Now, in all the municipalities constituted under section 10 (1) of the Act some years ago by executive order the number of elected members in certain of the municipalities with a population of 15,000 and over was increased to two-thirds of the whole. That happened, if I remember aright, somewhere about 1909 or 1910 and since then we have had those 6 or 7 years' experience of the results of that Act. Well, Sir, 7 years is not a very long period to judge of the results of such an experiment, but I do say, Sir, that I have not observed in those municipalities in which this change has been made—I have not seen in my own division—that a very striking advance of efficiency has followed that change. I would like to ask the Honourable Member if in the case of his own municipality of Bandra, on which he is a nominated member, whether he has seen any improvement as a result of its new constitution. I think he will find that nothing of the sort has happened. I do not find that the roads are any better, I do not find there has been a greater solicitude for such matters as primary schools, I do not find that the sanitation is better, and I do not find the people there are any the more ready to adopt or consent to any the least suggestion for any the smallest increase of the necessary taxation for the most essential purposes.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Have we not made proposals very recently?

The Honourable Mr. PRATT:—I am not talking now of Bandra in particular: I am talking of municipalities generally. I find that for the most essential purposes, the most elementary objects of sanitation such as the mere cleansing of the inhabited area, even in those cases any small taxation for such matters as that, is agreed to, if at all, extremely grudgingly. The two-thirds majority so far has not led to any advance—or any improvement in local self-government—and that being so I ask this Council to consider well before accepting such a sweeping proposal of the Honourable Member as to make such an immediate leaping advance so as to have a proportion of two-thirds elective members in all municipalities, especially when we have the open admission of the Honourable Member that as soon as he got that he would proceed to ask for a further advance of 75 per cent. or 99 per cent. Well, Sir, we have heard a good deal of the practice in this respect of other provinces and I should like to place before the Council a few facts and figures about the practice in this respect of some of our immediate neighbours in the Native States adjoining our territory. I find in the last published issue of the Baroda State Administration Report——

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. I cannot allow the Honourable Member to refer to Native States.

The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS:—Your Excellency,—It was not in my programme to speak on this resolution, but after the remarks of the Honourable Mr. PRATT I feel inclined to break my programme, because his speech is bristling with so many fallacies that I should reply to the several arguments which he has brought forward against the resolution of the Honourable Mr. PATEL.

He says, in the first place, that nomination is a very desirable thing and that it is found in practice that it is very necessary that the nomination element should not be extinct. In that, Your Excellency, I think that the Honourable Mr. PRATT has rather gone beyond the point. Nobody up to now has denied that the nominated element must remain on municipalities so far as present circumstances are concerned. He added the vague expression "reasonable proportion." He used the word "reasonable." Now, what is a reasonable proportion? Originally, when elective franchise was granted to municipalities, one-half of elected members were allowed, and I suppose a promise was held out that this proportion would be gradually increased as time and circumstances justified, and as a matter of fact in practice that one-half has been increased, not only in the other neighbouring provinces of this country which have been quoted by the Honourable Mr. PATEL with his usual industry and application, but also in our own Presidency only recently, as has been pointed out by the Honourable Mr. PATEL, this very Government issued a resolution granting two-thirds elective majority to some of the municipalities and my municipality (the Karachi Municipality) is one of those. So, the sweeping proposition which it seems to me the Honourable Mr. PRATT was contending for that a reasonable proportion of nominated members should be immutable has actually been done away with in practice. So we are obliged to fall back upon what the word "reasonable" means. I think from the policy of Government, as not only enunciated from time to time but actually put into practice, it is to be gathered that the institution of self-government as introduced in India—self-government in municipal bodies, local boards, and I may say self-government in legislative councils—is in order to train the people of the country in the art of governing themselves, starting of course with small beginnings and then going on gradually up to as far as is compatible with the interest of the population and the efficiency of the administration. Now, the Honourable Mr. PRATT found an opportunity of seizing hold of a certain remark of the Honourable Mr. PATEL in which he frankly said that if two-thirds were just now conceded he would put forward a proposal for three-fourths. I do not think the Honourable Mr. PRATT need have taken the Honourable Mr. PATEL at his word. He did not mean to say that he would ask for three-fourths the very next day. What he meant was that just as advance has been made from half to two-thirds, the time might come when we would be justified in making a further advance from two-thirds to three-fourths. Of course, if we find him precipitate, hasty and unreasonable, we might bring him to book. That would all depend upon ourselves. Of course, the Honourable Mr. PRATT rhetorically went on elaborately on that point and said that as soon as the Honourable Mr. PATEL got the 60 per cent. he would proceed to 75 per cent., then to 90 and then to 99 per cent. That I think was merely a rhetorical exaggeration.

Then the Honourable Mr. PRATT quoted the instance of the Bombay Corporation. The Bombay Corporation has been enjoying since 1888 two-ninths nominated members and no complaint has been made. I think that is no argument at all. Two-ninths is certainly such a very small proportion that there has been found no occasion for any complaint on the part of the Bombay Corporation which, after all, is more or less dominated by a Municipal Commissioner, and whatever may have been said in the controversies that have arisen with regard to the appointment of the Municipal Commissioner, I say that after the appointment of a Municipal Commissioner the municipality resolves itself more or less into a debating society. Therefore no occasion arises for the municipality to agitate for the proportion of elected members being enhanced, and after all the circumstances prevailing in the Bombay Corporation are entirely different from those in the mofussil municipalities. As a matter of fact the Bombay Municipal Corporation was instituted under entirely different circumstances more than half a century ago. It was introduced under a special Act and the conditions of this special Act were specified, and I think it is entirely unfair to compare the Bombay Municipal Corporation with any other mofussil municipality.

After all, we find that the Honourable Mr. PRATT has not provided a single answer to the quotations of the Honourable Mr. PATEL by which he has shown that the other provinces of India do enjoy self-government and which justifies the remark which he made yesterday, and of course very seriously challenged, that the Bombay Presidency in the whole of the country is more or less treated as the Cinderella of India. I think that complaint has been illustrated today, not only from the fact that in this regard also the elective element has been denied to the same extent as the other Presidencies have been granted, but also if any attempt is made by any of the non-official members to raise that elective proportion it is to a certain extent resented by members of the Government.

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Harchandrài Vishindas; Mr. Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh.]

Then the last argument of the Honourable Mr. PRATT was rather a very extraordinary one. He says: "I have not noticed any kind of great improvement or great efficiency after two-thirds elective majority has been granted to the elective municipalities." I cannot understand this kind of argument at all. Does he mean that it is only after some ocular proofs of efficiency are given that municipalities will be entitled to greater elective franchise than otherwise? I think so far as the efficiency in the provision of sanitary and educational institutions is concerned, it is not necessarily the elective element that is entirely responsible for it. Does Government and the Honourable Mr. PRATT mean that if the proportion should have been reversed—if the nominated element was given two-thirds and the elective element one-third—the efficiency would all of a sudden spring up to the degree of perfection? Certainly not. I have never heard that argument as a criterion for granting enhanced representation. After all, the much quoted remark of Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman may be considered quite apt in this connection. Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman said when he was Prime Minister of England that more efficient government is no substitute for self-government. What is wanted is that the people should be trained in the art of governing themselves and efficiency will come as a matter of course. This does not rest upon election or nomination. I submit that none of the arguments advanced by the Honourable Mr. PRATT are relevant and they have not appealed to me.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL is rather making a big jump in the first part of his resolution. I should have preferred that he should have confined himself to the second part. I would wish that he should proceed gradually by first of all proposing the appointment of non-official Presidents to those municipalities who enjoy the two-thirds elective majority, as that experiment I dare say the Government themselves seem inclined to encourage from what has happened in the past, and then after some time, when that proved successful, as I am quite sure it will prove successful, to proceed to the other step. But I submit that inherently there is nothing wrong with the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S resolution as is tried to be made out by the previous speaker.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH :—Your Excellency,—I support the motion that is now before the Council. One of the arguments that has been put forward against the motion is that, if it succeeds, it would not bring the millenium nearer and that the increase of elected members has not improved in a striking manner the position of the municipalities. This may be perfectly true. No one believes that the mere increase of elected members would produce a millenium. There are numbers of conditions which are necessary for the purpose of bringing complete success to municipal administration, and I do not at all believe that the single circumstance that a larger elective body if created would necessarily bring complete success or the municipality would be the best on that account, but the whole question is whether the giving of a large elective body to the municipality is a right step or a wrong step. That is the whole question before the Council. There is no doubt that if large majorities are given to some of the municipalities that would not remove all sorts of hindrances that obstruct their proper working, but the question is whether the legislature ought, in the first instance, to provide that the number of elected members shall not be less than the number of the other members. Government are quite prepared to give elective majorities to some municipalities by executive orders: are we to understand that in these cases Government were acting wrongly? I submit that this important question is not to be got over by saying that the municipalities are not as good as they ought to be. Then the other question is in reference to nomination. I have not the least doubt that some of the nominations which have been made in this Council by Government have been of the best kind. I do not doubt that some of the nominations that are made on the municipalities and local boards by officers of Government, and by the Government itself are the best nominations that could have been made. What is the object of nomination? The object of nomination is that where there may be important interests which are not represented by election, those interests should be supplied by the authority by nomination, and therefore nomination should be limited so far as it is necessary to the extent of representing interests which are not represented by election; and my friend the Honourable Mr. PRATT has not been able to suggest that by giving an increased number of elective seats to the municipality above the number of such nomination, the importance of good nomination would be affected. Then also we have to see whether in all cases the persons who have been nominated can command the same respect and confidence of the people as the elected members. Some nominated members may command more respect and confidence, but what we have to take into consideration is that all of them should be such as can command more respect and more confidence from the people for whom they are working. It may be that we may reach a stage beyond which it may or may not be advisable to advance in reference to majority, but I submit that so far as the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S present motion is concerned the advance for which he asks appears to be a reasonable one and I can understand from the action which has been taken by Government themselves that the advance is a very reasonable one. You may say whatever you like when the Honourable Mr. PATEL carries out his idea of asking a larger number of elective members than two-thirds. That is a question which may be considered when that proposition is brought forward, but so far as we have to deal with the present proposition I do not think that the majority which he asks for is a majority which can in any way be said to be improper or objectionable. Then, Sir, I am only sorry that there has been any reference to outside states. So far as that question is concerned I should think that we should set an example to the Indian States rather than——

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. I cannot allow the Honourable Member to discuss the subject of Native States.

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH:—With these words I beg to support the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—I have very great pleasure in supporting the resolution of my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL. The resolution, as worded, has erred on the side of moderation. It is hardly satisfactory that out of 156 municipalities in the Presidency so many as 39 should be still wholly nominated. Considering the time that has elapsed in dealing with the improvement of the present state of affairs, I think it is high time that an advance be now made. Moreover, the Honourable Mr. PATEL has asked for only two-thirds majority. I think it would be better in the case of municipalities in larger towns and cities that the proportion should be three-fourths and not two-thirds. Even now we find that out of a total number of 2,161 members we have 386 ex officio, 807 nominated and only 968 elected. I think this proportion is required to be adjusted otherwise. If we had a larger number of elected members it would be better in the interest of the people, as they will have greater opportunities of training for local self-government in these bodies. At the outset it may have been necessary to have a large proportion of officials for guidance, but that time has now gone by. Now it is time to allow the people to have greater share in the management of their own affairs. With these few words I support the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. DATTATRAYA VENKATESH BELVI:—Your Excellency,—I support the resolution which has been moved so ably by my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL. I feel it is my duty to speak at least a few words in support of this resolution as I happen to be one of the representatives of municipalities in this Council. The question before the Council is to be approached from a common-sense point of view. Most of the municipalities in the Presidency already do enjoy the privilege of having half the number of municipal councillors elected, and what is now demanded by my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL is only very natural. The question has been considered by one of my Honourable Colleagues from rather a theoretical point of view and the argument that was advanced was whether an increase in the proportion of elected members will necessarily result in an increase of efficiency of a municipality. I submit, my Lord, that that is an argument which is beside the point. If we carry this argument to its logical conclusion, it would only mean that concentration of all authority in Government servants is the best form of government in the world. I am perfectly sure that, if Your Excellency were permitted by law to make laws for the people of this Presidency either alone or at the most with the assistance of the members of the Executive Council, perhaps the laws enacted by Your Excellency would be much better than the laws which are enacted with our assistance. But it will not be in consonance with the political instinct of the British people. Good government is no substitute, as we are so often told, for self-government. British rule in this land is intended to teach us the art of self-government. Government by the people may not be so efficient as government by public servants, but government with the approval of the people, government with the assistance of the people, government with the knowledge of the people, is a thing much more desirable than autocratic government. We have to bear these elementary principles in mind and then proceed as practical men. Is it too much to demand that there should be in the case of each municipality constituted under the Municipal Act a majority of elected members at least to the extent of two-thirds after the lapse of something like 30 years after the introduction of local self-government into this Presidency? We are told so often that Bombay is one of the foremost Presidencies of India. We pride ourselves that we are the premier Presidency in India, but are we not lagging much behind the so-called benighted Presidency of Madras? Look at the very first Madras Local Board and Municipal Acts, and what do you find? You find that in the very first instance it was laid down there that the proportion of elected members should not be less than three-fourths, and here in Bombay when it is, in the year of grace 1917, suggested that the proportion in the case of certain municipalities—not all municipalities—constituted under section 10 (1) of the Municipal Act may be raised to two-thirds, it is thought that we are making a demand which is in the opinion of some Honourable Members simply preposterous. It is feared that if two-thirds be granted, Mr. PATEL will rise tomorrow and demand three-fourths and that he will go on demanding more every day. But, as has been rightly described by some of my Honourable friends, this is simply an argument which is put forward in a vein of rhetoric; there is neither force nor substance in it. I submit that if Mr. PATEL does not unfortunately succeed in getting three-fourths from this Council, his successors will surely demand three-fourths and even more in due time But the fear that people will go on demanding more privileges should not deter Your Excellency's Government from considering any demand on its merits. Is there anything wrong in the prayer which is now made to Your Excellency's Government? To my humble mind it seems that if the resolution errs at all, it errs on the side of caution. Had I been in Mr. PATEL'S position I would have surely demanded three-fourths and not two-thirds. To grant a two-thirds majority of members in municipalities constituted under section 10 (1) will be in consonance with common sense and the genius of British administration in this Presidency. With these few words I support the resolution moved by my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL.

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Dattatraya Venkatesh Belvi; Mr. G. S. Curtis.]

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—May it please Your Excellency,—The Honourable Member who moved this resolution has by dint of using figures for the whole Presidency given us a somewhat gloomy view of the condition of affairs. The actual state of affairs is this. There are 157 municipalities in this Presidency, of which 26 are in Sind and 131 in the Presidency proper. Of the 26 in Sind, no less than 19 are constituted under section 14 of the Act, having purely nominated members. Out of the 131 in the Presidency proper, 13 are constituted of purely nominated members and consist for the most part of seasonal municipalities or municipalities at hill-stations, for which nomination is the only possible way of securing commissioners. Then we are left, as far as the Presidency proper is concerned, with 118 municipalities constituted under section 10 (1) of the District Municipal Act. Of these, if my figures are not wrong, 92 have the privilege of electing their Presidents by two-thirds majority. Therefore, Sir, of these 92 again 26 at the present moment—

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—It is not 92 because the others are municipalities which have a right to elect their President by a bare majority.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—I beg the Honourable Member's pardon. My figures are here. If we deduct from 131 13 which are seasonal municipalities, we are left with 118 municipalities. Of these 26 elect their President by a bare majority and the balance (92) by two-thirds majority.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—The 92 municipalities have not got the right of selecting a President by two-thirds majority. In reply to my question which I put the other day the figures given to me are 88.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—92 out of 118.

Now 26 are city municipalities and that number is shortly to be raised to, or has been raised to 31; I am not quite sure at what stage the correspondence is got. But the actual number of municipalities which satisfy the test of 15,000 population in the Presidency proper is 31. Therefore the state of affairs is at present as follows:—There are 13 with wholly nominated members. Then there are 118 municipalities constituted under section 10 (1). Of these there are 92 municipalities who have the privilege of either selecting or electing their President by two-thirds majority and the balance are city municipalities with the privilege of electing their President by a bare majority.

Now I may say at once that Government are prepared to make concessions in this matter; but that it will shorten discussion very much if the Honourable Member would recognize that the concession must be given, if any, to the municipalities who already possess the privilege of appointing their President by two-thirds majority, that is, as regards the second part of the resolution. Government cannot possibly accept the first part of the resolution. As regards the second part of the resolution they are prepared to make concessions in the direction of reducing the population test which renders them entitled to elect their President. If the Honourable Member will accept that position I will ask him to withdraw the first part of the resolution and let us get on with the second.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I would certainly withdraw the first part of my resolution provided the second part of it is accepted by Government.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I cannot proceed to bargain with the Honourable Member. My Honourable colleague has told him in general terms that he may withdraw the first part of the resolution if he likes.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I withdraw the first part of the resolution and the discussion may go on with regard to the second part.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—First part of the resolution by leave withdrawn.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—The second part of my resolution runs as follows:—

enjoy the privilege of selecting a President by a two-thirds majority shall, in future, be not less than two-thirds of the whole number of Councillors."

This is the resolution which I have now the honour to move for the acceptance of this Council. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS, member in charge of the local self-government portfolio, has just now told us that there are 92 municipalities who enjoy the privilege of selecting a President by a two-thirds majority. Whatever the exact number the sole question for this Council to consider now is whether when the Governor in Council considers a municipality is fit for selecting a President by a two-thirds majority, they are justified in withholding the privilege of a two-thirds elective majority. If they do so, the privilege of selecting a President is and will remain merely illusory. I do not think I need detain the Council any longer on this resolution as I trust there will be no difficulty in the way of its acceptance.

The Honourable SHEIKH GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH.—Your Excellency,—I am quite in sympathy with the resolution of the Honourable Mr. PATEL. I myself support the principle of elected majorities on the municipalities. But the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S resolution presents one difficulty that if the number is increased to two-third the position of minorities becomes from bad to worse. Therefore, I request that if Your Excellency's government is going to accept the resolution of the Honourable Mr. PATEL, Your Excellency would kindly exercise the powers under section 11, clause (c) (2), which has up to this time remained a dead letter.

The Honourable Mr. F. G. PRATT.—Your Excellency,—I would point out to the Council that the second part of the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S resolution is illogical in one important respect. His resolution as it now stands is that the number of elected members in all municipalities which enjoy the privilege of selection of a president by two-thirds majority should not be less than two-thirds. This appears to proceed on the assumption that all those municipalities which select their presidents by two-thirds majority have an elective system. That is not the case. There are a fair number of municipalities to whom Government was pleased to extend the privilege of selecting their presidents by two-thirds majority, but which nevertheless are entirely nominated municipalities. The privilege of selection which they exercise therefore is confined to selection from the body of councillors who are nominated by Government. Here again I would submit for the consideration of the Council that these municipalities which consist entirely of nominated members are the municipalities which are described in the Municipal Act as being, for various exceptional reasons, in a rather backward state and the inhabitants are unfit for the ordinary constitution of a municipality under section 10. Therefore it amounts to this that in the case of those municipalities which are unfit for the ordinary constitution under section 14, the Honourable Member wishes at one sweep to convert those entirely nominated municipalities into two-thirds elected municipalities on the same footing as the big towns with 15,000 inhabitants. Perhaps it will simplify matters if I give specific instances. In the Northern Division the Mehmedabad municipality consists of entirely nominated councillors. That has been given the privilege of selecting its president by two-thirds majority. Dakor is another instance of a town where there are entirely nominated councillors which has been given the privilege of selecting their president by two-thirds majority. These ex-hypothesi backward towns the Honourable Member wishes should suddenly be equipped with the elective system of a two-thirds majority. I repeat that in these hasty proposals the Honourable Member is unduly forcing the pace. He is trying to urge those municipalities into a run before they know how to walk with the result their last condition is likely to prove worse than their first.

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES.

[Mr. Balkrishna Sitaram Kamat; Mr. Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh; Mr. G. S. Curtis; the President; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel.] [16TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMAT :—Your Excellency,—The Honourable Mr. PRATT has cited the instances of certain municipalities where all the members are nominated and yet they have got the right of selecting their President. I wish to quote the instance of one municipality, a small one, to which I belong, and where although there is the right of selecting the President, yet the members are half elected and half nominated, and I think the selection of the President is going on very harmoniously and successfully. I dare say if municipalities like this are granted the privilege of having two-thirds elected members and only one-third nominated members—I am speaking as a nominated member—there will be no harm. For the sake of a few backward municipalities I do not think that some municipalities which are fit to exercise this privilege with success, if granted, should be kept back from advancing. I am entirely in favour of the proposal of my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL and I support the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH:—Your Excellency,—the objection which has been pointed out by my Honourable friend Mr. PRATT arises from the fact that certain words of the original resolution which ought to have remained in this part of the resolution have been withdrawn and I should therefore propose that the resolution should run in this way :—

> "This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the number of elective members on all municipalities constituted under section 10 (1) of the Bombay District Municipal Act of 1901 and enjoying the privilege of selecting a President by two-thirds majority shall in future be not less than two-thirds of the total number of councillors."

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS :—I want to know if section 10 (1) is to be retained or not.

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH :—Yes. That is in my amendment.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—I do not know whether I can shorten the discussion in any way. I don't know that the Honourable Mover is prepared to accept the amendment.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL;—I do accept the amendment, Your Excellency.

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH :—I do not think that my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL should ever have intended that in the case of a municipality in which there was no election of the President, it was to have a two-thirds majority. The present proposition I think arises from a concrete instance which occurred at Ahmedabad. Some time ago the whole body of elected members were agreeable that a certain person should be elected President, but because one person was absent or disinclined to vote, the conditions of the election were found not to be satisfied. That appears to me to be a circumstance which ought to be remedied. I submit that in the case of municipalities which have the right of electing a President by an elected majority, the Government should be pleased to give such number of elected members slightly larger than those prescribed for enabling them to elect a President.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—May it please Your Excellency,—I may ask the indulgence of this Council if there has been any want of clarity and I would urge the Honourable Member who has moved this resolution and the Honourable Members who feel inclined to follow his example that it would be very much better if in future resolutions were moved as single resolutions and not as alternatives. This particular matter of giving statistics is always one in which there is apt to be confusion. However, the proposal is now clear; it only relates to municipalities constituted under section 10 (1), and the purport is that those municipalities who have the privilege of selecting their President by two-thirds majority shall have in future not less than two-thirds elective

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. G. S. Curtis; Mr. F. G. Pratt; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel.]

Now, Sir, the Honourable Member has compared the state of things existing in Bombay with those in other provinces. I would ask the Council to notice two points, first as regards the character of the President of the board, and secondly the character and the constitution of the board itself. First as regards the President or Chairman of the board I believe Bombay compares very favourably with other provinces. If you refer to the statement at page 6 of "Indian Local Self-government Policy, 1915" you will notice that Bombay though a small Presidency in area has by far the largest number of municipalities, no less than 153; and out of these 153 municipalities there were at that time 37 official Presidents. Those 37 official Presidents have now with few exceptions disappeared. In the Punjab at that time out of 92 municipalities there were no less than 77 with official President. In Burma there were 41 officials and no non-officials.

Now as regards the character of the board itself I venture to ask the Honourable Members to be so good as to give my remarks a careful consideration. The Honourable Member has referred to the United Provinces Act of 1900. It is perfectly true that in the United Provinces Act of 1900 there was a provision that the nominated members should not exceed one-fourth. But I would warn the Honourable Members of this Council, especially those who urge the constant increase in the elected majority, that there is a movement growing in this Presidency by which the minorities who have no chance of securing representation through election or through the ballot box and who lose their chance of representation by nomination disappearing, will demand separate representation through separate electorates. I am specially led to make the remark by the Honourable Member's reference to the United Provinces Act. He referred to the United Provinces Act of 1900. I hold here the United Provinces Act of 1916 and it is a very interesting Act. If the Honourable Member refers to sections 9, 10 and 11, he will find that special electorates are constituted on religious grounds and on other grounds and that there are in these sections very elaborate clauses which constitute a very serious infringement of the principle of election merely by numerical strength which is the basis on which we have proceeded hitherto. Therefore, Sir, I would urge Honourable Members who have spoken on this subject to remember that the mere question of increasing the representation of the elective element on the various local bodies in this Presidency is fraught with a certain amount of danger and requires very careful consideration indeed.

The Honourable Mr. PRATT referred to the Bombay Municipal Corporation and he mentioned the fact that two-ninths of the members were nominated by Government. He would have made more of his point if he had gone on and shown that out of the 72 members of the Bombay Municipal Corporation only 36 are elected by wards, 16 are elected by Justices, 2 by the Fellows of the Bombay University and 2 by the Chamber of Commerce, and 16 are nominated by Government. Therefore, Sir, as far as what has hitherto been considered to be the most successful institution of local self-government in India is concerned, the actual proportion of members of that institution who have gained their direct election is only one-half, and therefore, Sir, there is nothing particularly mystical about the two-thirds majority, for which the Honourable Member is contending so strongly.

Now, Sir, I will consider first of all—again I am talking as regards the Presidency proper and not Sind because in Sind, I am sure the Honourable Members will bear in mind, the conditions are entirely peculiar. Mr. Martin who was also a member of Mr. LAWRENCE'S Committee and who has signed the report was also of the same opinion.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I did not personally agree with Mr. Martin.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—I fancy representatives of Sind will contend to the effect that there is a difference between the Presidency proper and Sind and that there are different circumstances there of which special notice must be taken. However, we will now proceed with the Presidency proper. In 1908 this elective privilege was conceded to towns with a population of 15,000. Of those at the present moment there are 31. Government have taken into consideration the various circumstances attending this controvercy and have arrived at the conclusion that the limit of 15,000 imposed in July 1908 may be lowered to towns with a population of 10,000 subject to the condition that such municipalities as obtain the privilege shall undertake to appoint a Government servant as chief officer. This was the condition imposed in 1908 and it is a condition which is necessary for good municipal Government. The principle which we have followed steadily in this Presidency, and which has made this Presidency a model for the rest of India, is that there should be a strong executive under a Government officer as exemplified in the Bombay Municipal Corporation. It is a fact that in many up-country municipalities at the present moment the executive is extraordinarily week. I have instances here. I think one is the town well-known to the Honourable Member, the town of Borsad which has a population of something like 12,000 and a revenue of Rs. 18,000, situated in a most fertile part of India and advanced in every possible way; and yet the head of the municipal executive in that town receives the princely salary of Rs. 20 rising to Rs. 35 after ten years of service. Similar instances could be multiplied.

Now, Sir, there are other cases of which I have a list here which could be brought forward before this Council which show why Government have felt some unwillingness to hand over the administration to the tender mercies of an elective majority in these important towns. Government are quite prepared to say that the majority shall be elected to the extent of two-thirds provided there is a reasonable guarantee that the administration shall be maintained on an efficient level and that the standards of sanitation, the collection of revenue, good order and so forth are kept fairly high. Government are not prepared to see the interest of minority entirely sacrificed unless there is some reasonable guarantee that the poorer parts of the town are kept in a decent sanitary condition and that there is a strong executive to see as far as possible that the administration of the very extensive powers which must be given to all these local bodies is carried on in a way which is just and fair to all concerned.

Now, Sir, what is the result of this concession? The number of municipalities at present with a population of 15,000 is 31. If the limit is lowered to 10,000, the number will be raised to say 55 as far as the Presidency proper is concerned. In addition Government is prepared to give a similar concession to the towns of the population of not less than 10,000, if those towns are willing to accede to the condition that a Government officer shall be employed as Chief Officer. In exceptional cases an officer not in Government service will be accepted provided that he is sufficiently efficient to guarantee that the administration shall be kept up to a high level. But, Sir, Government as a rule will insist on the Chief Officer being from their own service—a subordinate of their own. The Bombay Municipality has shown how well administration conducted on these lines can be managed and we think that with that example before them the other municipalities cannot do better than copy the same arrangement.

The figures as regards Sind I have left for further consideration. Sind has, I think, 26 municipalities of which 19 are constituted under section 14. Six or seven will shortly be constituted under section 10 (1). Of these 7, four have already an elective majority. The adoption of the alternative of 10,000 limit would probably bring in Larkana and possibly Jacobabad, but of that I am not quite sure. Any how it is certain that with a reduction in the population limit roughly speaking the number of municipalities with the elective privilege will increase in the Presidency proper from 31 to something like 55. That is to say, roughly taking the total number constituted under section 10 (1) in the Presidency proper it works out roughly speaking to 48 or 49 per cent. That,

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. G. S. Curtis; Mr. Ghulam Muhammad walad Khán Bahádur Wali Muhammad Bhurgri; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; the President.]

Sir, is a very considerable concession, but Government regret they cannot go at the present moment any further. As I have indicated in my opening remarks the question of minority representation has been very prominently brought to the notice of Government and they think it is absolutely necessary to ensure that some such step is taken to safeguard the interests of those minorities before accepting without any precaution whatsoever the unrestricted proportion of two-thirds majority. But no doubt in course of time as administration improves and as the Municipal Commissioners advance in their knowledge of administration, in their willingness to accept responsibility and above all in their determination to conduct the administration in a businesslike manner, qualities which in certain cases are remarkably deficient, it would no doubt be possible to increase the number of cases in which this elective privilege would be accorded. At the present moment, however, this is as far as Government are prepared to go. If the Honourable Member is not going to accept the suggestion Government has no alternative but to oppose the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. GHULAM MUHAMMAD walad Khan Bahadur WALI MUHAMMAD BHURGRI :—Your Excellency,—May I be allowed to say one word? The conditions in Sind are these:—The Muhammadan community in Sind has representation so far as only their nomination is concerned. So far we are not against Government granting this privilege of two-thirds majority.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL :—Your Excellency,—I must say I am very much disappointed at the attitude taken up by Government on this resolution. I tried and tried my best to meet the wishes of Government and narrowed down my resolution as much as possible. My disappointment is keener especially when I compare this attitude with the words of sympathy that fell from Your Excellency and the Members of the Executive Council only yesterday in regard to local self-government. Now in 24 hours' time I again realize that the old state of things still holds good and that the attitude of Government towards this all important question is as unsympathetic as ever. I must candidly confess I do not know what to say. What is going to happen to the Bombay Government if they grant two-thirds elective majority to municipalities I really cannot understand. What! Are Heavens going to fall? And again why should this question of the grant of two-thirds majority to municipalities be subjected to impossible conditions so that no municipality could take advantage of that grant?

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—What is the impossible condition?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—The Honourable Mr. CURTIS told us on behalf of Government that two-thirds elective majority to a municipality with a population of 10,000 or over shall be granted only if that municipality retains an officer of Government as an executive officer or Chief Officer.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Does the Honourable Member call that an impossible condition?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Yes, Your Excellency. I call that an impossible condition. Anyone acquainted with the financial condition of these smaller municipalities will at once agree with me. The Members of this Council will remember that as regards rural boards, i.e., taluka boards and district boards, the Local Board Committee has recommended the grant of two-thirds elective majority and Government say that they propose to shortly carry that recommendation into effect. If that is so, I fail to see why Government is taking up this attitude in respect of similar grant to municipalities. When Government are ready to give the taluka boards a two-thirds majority it is almost an anomaly that municipalities should be treated differently. Besides by this resolution Honourable Members will see that I do not seek to secure an elective majority, for all the municipalities of the Presidency, nor do I want a two-thirds majority for all the municipalities constituted under section 10 (1). The resolution in its present form affects only those municipalities that are constituted under section 10 (1) of the Act, provided that the privilege of selecting a President by a two-thirds majority has been granted to them.

You will thus see that I have narrowed down my resolution to this extent in deference to the wishes of Government and in order that it may be acceptable to them. And yet Government chooses to remain immoveable. It remains for me now to put the resolution to the sense of the Council and I earnestly appeal to every Honourable Member in the name of local self-government and for the fame of this Presidency to vote against Government.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—I would begin by assuring my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL that we deeply regret that we should cause him this terrible disappointment that he professes to have with regard to the action and position of Government on this resolution but I would urge with regard to it exactly what I urged with regard to another which was moved a few hours ago, namely, that with regard to village panchayats—and I have urged this point on my Honourable friend over and over again in private conversation—it is really putting Government in a condition of extreme difficulty, pending the enquiry and production, as I hope about next Christmas time, of a comprehensive Bill, to have these matters brought up one by one, when they are being enquired into by a special officer. In connection with this, I may say, that all district municipalities must necessarily come into the scope of the whole enquiry. I think it may fairly be said that Government are showing a good deal of friendly intention towards my Honourable friend's resolution, by agreeing to reduce the population limit from 15,000 to 10,000 and in special circumstances to less. It shows anyhow our general intentions though it is not an expression of final judgment on the part of Government with regard to what shall be the ultimate procedure in the future legislation in the case of district municipalities. I sincerely regret that the Honourable Mr. PATEL is unable to accept what we are willing to give, by way of compromise, towards the aim which he has in view and which I know he always urges with much enthusiasm and zeal but sometimes I do feel—I hope he will not mind my saying it—that his zeal outruns his discretion and that he does not quite consider the circumstances and the difficulties of Government having regard to the enquiry which is pending.

The resolution as amended was then put to the vote and carried, 23 members voting for and 18 against it. The Council then divided as follows :—

[After lunch.]

The Council re-assembled at 2-30 p. m.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. Resolution No. 4. The Honourable Mr. PATEL.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—The resolution that stands in my name reads thus:—

"This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the number of elective members on all local boards enjoying the franchise of election for the last 25 years or upwards shall, in future, be not less than two-thirds of the total number of members."

Your Excellency, before I begin to discuss the merits of this resolution I should like to make a personal explanation. I and some of my non-official colleagues have been repeatedly told that we have not been accepting the assurances given by Government with the same cordiality with which they are offered. Speaking for myself, Your Excellency, I accept those assurances so far as Your Excellency and the members of the present Government are concerned with perfect confidence. But Your Excellency will agree that unfortunately the past history of this Government is not without instances in which similar assurances have on previous occasions been either entirely ignored or lost sight of. I may be allowed to add in this connection that however honourably and scrupulously Your Excellency and the members of your Government may fulfil their assurances, they are not at all binding on your successors. Where is the guarantee, my Lord, that after Your Excellency leaves charge of this great office, the pledges given by you will be carried out? Our past experience in this respect creates an uneasy feeling in our minds and that is the reason why we insistently demand that, whatever your assurances, they must be translated into action during Your Excellency's tenure of office.

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN TALUKA LOCAL BOARDS.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I take it that the reasons for my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL'S uneasiness are not with regard to the present Government but any Government that may come in the future.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL (continuing):—This resolution, my Lord, affords an excellent opportunity to Your Excellency's Government to fulfil the assurances given by you yesterday. We were told that Government had no objection to grant two-thirds elective majority to taluka local boards as recommended by the Committee appointed by Your Excellency's Government. Now, under the present Act Your Excellency's Government have power by executive order to grant elective majority to local boards and all I ask by this resolution is that such order granting a two-thirds majority to those local boards in the Presidency that have enjoyed the franchise of election for the last 25 years or upwards should issue. There are many local boards in this Presidency which consist of half the number of elected and half the number of nominated members for the last 25 years. Your Excellency's Government in the Press Note appointing the Loca Boards Committee very rightly remarked that the disappointedly slow progress of these local bodies is mainly due to the fact that the constitution of these local boards has remained as it was thirty years ago when they were first constituted and that the time has come when these bodies should be released from the leading strings of official control. Your Excellency, sympathy was the key-note of that Press Note. The members of the Committee approached the consideration of this particular question in the same symathetic spirit. They examined 300 witnesses—292 to be accurate—they examined 292 witnesses, both officials and non-officials, Collectors, Assistant Collectors, Deputy Collectors and Mamlatdars, and also non-officials. The selection of these witnesses was mostly left to the Collectors, and yet out of the total of 292 witnesses as many as 250 or 260, say, more than three-fourths, were found to be in favour of the proposal to grant a two-thirds elective majority to the local boards of this Presidency. The Committee very rightly accepted their statements and recommended to Your Excellency's Government that two-thirds elective majority must be granted.

Now, Your Excellency will remember that in 1915 I moved a similar resolution. The demand made in that was wider than the one I make in this. I then sought to secure two-thirds elective majority for all local boards that were in existence for 25 years or upwards. By this resolution I ask Government to grant two-thirds elective majority only to those taluka boards that have been enjoying the franchise of election for the last 25 years and upwards. You will agree with me, therefore, that the resolution is most simple and most modest. It is not at all necessary to detain the Council any longer, for I have not the slightest doubt that the resolution will be accepted by Government.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur VENKATESH SHRINIVAS NAIK:—May it please Your Excellency,—I fully sympathise with my friend the Honourable

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN TALUKA LOCAL BOARDS.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Rao Bahadur Venkatesh Shrinivas Naik.]

Mr. PATEL in his aspirations and efforts to secure elective majority in the constitution of the taluka local boards that have been enjoying the elective franchise for the last 25 years. It must be admitted that the taluka local boards in in which my friend wishes to have the elective majority exist mostly in rural areas and most of the members constituting such boards come from rural areas. It must also be admitted that education in rural areas has not advanced to such an extent as in towns and members constituting these boards are not consequently advanced in ideas. Having regard to the progressive development of local self-government and having regard also that some of the taluka local boards have been enjoying the franchise of election for the last 25 years, it is quite reasonable that the country should have an aspiration for a larger share in the administration of their local affairs, but it is to be seen whether such share in the administration is effectively and efficiently gained only by increasing the elective elements. I submit, my Lord, that though the principle of election is fair, is reasonable, is in consonance with the spirit of the time, is recommended by the Royal Commission upon decentralization and is also commended by the Government of India, in their resolution on local self-government, in rural areas, we do not always get proper sort of persons only by elections. It is too well known that at the time of elections any and every sort of influence is brought to bear upon the voters and very rarely they exercise their free will in voting. Moreover, the property qualifications of these voters in the case of taluka local board election being too low, any and every sort of man, whether literate or illiterate, will become a voter and is easily influenced by busybodies and in the elections by them right sort of persons are not in every case returned. Instances will not be wanting to show that in many cases of these elections communal or party feelings are more predominating in influencing the voters than the real merits of the candidates. It is also too well known, and I have been saying this on the experience of sitting over a taluka local board as an elected Vice-President for the last 16 years, that very few people really take interest in the affairs of the taluka local boards and some such few people may not like the worry and botheration of canvassing and competing in the elections possibly against much inferior persons than themselves and the services of such persons will be lost to the local boards if. chances of bringing them on the constitution of the local boards are narrowed by increasing the elective elements. Such being the case, it is to be considered seriously whether the majority of the members of our taluka local boards should find their seats through the medium of elections only. Even the framers of the Local Boards Act, so far back as 1884, had the prescience to look far into the future and have framed the Act so as to meet the requirements of the progressive times. Section 5 of the Local Boards Act distinctly provides that it is for the Governor in Council to appoint, if deemed necessary, any person on the boards with the object of securing representation of the minorities as well as to secure to the boards the benefits of the advice and experience of officers of Government and gentlemen of high merits who, for diverse reasons, may not like and be unwilling to submit themselves for elections. It also provides that it is for His Excellency the Governor in Council to fix the proportion of elected to nominated members and lays a limitation on such nominations with regards to admitting salaried servants of Government. It is therefore quite clear that the question raised by this resolution is entirely one for the Government to determine by virtue of executive orders. When Your Excellency's Government have full powers to lay down the proportion of the members to be elected, I do not think that, unless the rural population is well educated and is ready to realise the responsibility that is thrown upon them in returning the right sort of persons to the taluka local boards, any restrictions should be laid upon Your Excellency's powers by prescribing definitely the proportion between elected and nominated members. Sufficient safeguards have been taken to lay a limit to the maximum number of officials on the board so as to avoid official predominance. My friend seems to be nervous that, unless Your Excellency's Government is tied hands and feet in the matter of the constitution of these boards, there are no possibilities of securing non-official and elective majority in the taluka local boards. The recent circulars issued by Your Excellency's Government and the announcements made by Your Excellency yesterday in this Council regarding the number of elected and nominated seats in many of the district local boards, show unmistakably the direction in which the wind blows and wherever Your Excellency finds that the people take interest and intelligent and non-official persons come forward to take care of their own affairs, Your Excellency should not, and I am sure will not, hesitate to extend the principle of elective majority.

Now, if we look into the administration reports of the local boards of this Presidency for the last six or seven years we find that except in a few talukas of Poona and Ratnagiri districts elections aroused no interest, and in these talukas also the number of candidates were on an average not more than double the seats contested. These reports also mention that in many instances Government had to nominate members under section 24 of the Local Boards Act as none came forward in many groups simply to express their willingness to work as members. My Lord, if Your Excellency would please allow me to read extracts from the report on the administration of local boards in the Presidency, I think, I would convince this Council of what I have said.

Triennial elections were held in the Presidency proper in the districts of Kaira and Broach. In the latter the election was uncontested in most of the groups but little interest was shown even where there was a contest.

Triennial elections were held in the districts of Karachi, Thana, Belgaum, Kolaba, Ratnagiri, Ahmednagar, West Khandesh and in some parts of Kanara. In all the districts except Karachi and Kolaba the electors were apathetic and indifferent, notably in Bassein in the Thana district where only 79 out of 661 enfranchised electors attended the polls. In three groups of the Satara district and one group in Ratnagiri no candidate came forward for election and consequently the appointment of three members had to be made by Government under section 24 of the Local Boards Act. The electors in the more advanced talukas of the Karachi district exhibited keen and lively interest in the electoral proceedings.

Triennial elections were held in the districts of Ahmedabad, Bijapur, Dharwar, Kanara, East Khandesh, Nasik, Satara, Sholapur and Hyderabad. In most cases the elections arroused no interest and in a considerable number there was no competition between candidates. In one group of the Badami taluka no candidate came forward at all, and the appointment of a member had to be made by Government under section 24 of the Local Boards Act.

1911-12.

The triennial period of the boards in the Poona and Kaira districts having expired they were constituted in the year under review. In the Poona district the contest being keen only in four talukas.

1912-13.

Elections in Surat, Thana, Ahmednagar, East and West Khandesh and Kanara, Karachi, Ratnagiri and part of Satara failed to arouse interest except in Ratnagiri where contest was keen. The Salsette seat was filled by nomination for want of candidate. Not more than one-third of enfranchised voters recorded their votes in C. D.

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN TALUKA LOCAL BOARDS.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Rao Bahadur Venkatesh Shrinivas Naik; Sardar Dulabawa Raisinghji; Mr. Siddanath Dhonddev Garud.]

1913-14.

Elections were held in the districts of Larkana, Nasik, Ahmednagar, Satara, Sholapur and Dharwar. With few exceptions the elections aroused no particular interest.

1914-15.

Elections were held in the districts of Poona, Kaira, Bijapur, Larkana and Thar and Parkar. They aroused only moderate interest, except in one taluka of the Poona district, where the number of candidates was more than double the number of seats contested.

These facts clearly show that in the rural areas yet very moderate interest is taken in the matter of elections and therefore I think that we should not yet hurry up in extending the higher elective franchise by laying limitations and fetters upon the powers of Government but should give them free discretion which they now have under the provisions of the Act to extend these higher elective rights in such local areas as will justify their extension.

The Honourable Sardar DULABAWA RAISINGHJI, Thakor of Kerwada :—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the resolution moved by my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL. I should like to observe that assurances were only yesterday given by both Your Excellency and the Honourable Member in charge that a more liberal policy would be followed in the immediate future after the completion of the enquiry, and those assurances I can assure Your Excellency were received by those who are interested in the welfare of local self-government with great gratification. Coming from a district as I do where Your Excellency has been pleased to extend the privilege of electing a non-official Vice-President for a long time and where Your Excellency's Government has been pleased to nominate a non-official President on the district local board, which measure will come into force at the end of this month, I can speak with great confidence that the time is ripe for granting a substantial elected majority in such districts where the privilege can safely be given. I do believe, and I think I am right in doing so, that the conditions vary in different parts of the Presidency, but so far as the Gujarat districts are concerned, I think, Your Excellency, that there will be no difficulty whatsoever in extending the privilege asked for by my Honourable friend in his resolution.

So much has been said about the principle of election and nomination that nothing remains for me to say for or against it. There is universal acceptance of the principle of election throughout all the civilised world. On the other hand the principle of nomination gives power to Government to nominate such persons who for various reasons are not elected or who do not seek election, and by this means Government secure due representation of the minorities, and whenever there is a minority, either Hindu or Muhammadan, Government can always safely nominate persons from those communities as representatives on these boards.

With these observations I support the resolution moved by my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL.

The Honourable Mr. SIDDANATH DHONDDEV GARUD :—Your Excellency,—I beg to accord my hearty support to the resolution which is placed before the Council. The question of the constitution of the district local boards and the taluka local boards has been thoroughly and carefully gone into by the Committee which was appointed by Your Excellency's Government and the Committee has also arrived at the opinion which has been expressed in the resolution. The special officer who has been appointed to investigate the question of the district and taluka local boards was also present at the Committee to give his assistance to the Committee, and so far as the principle embodied in the resolution is concerned I think it has also his approval. This is therefore an opportune moment for Government to accept this principle and generally to carry it out as far as possible and as soon as possible.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I am intervening at this period because I think it would really seem unnecessary to have all this flood of oratory with reference to facts which have been already well ascertained and conclusions fully arrived at. In the first instance, as regards district local boards, Honourable Members are aware that 15 boards out of 19 have already elective majority. A measure which was introduced in this Council yesterday and referred to a Select Committee, of which the Honourable Mover of this resolution is a member, aims at giving non-official Presidents to the four remaining district local boards and to provide them with an elective majority, and also to provide for the formation of constituencies for the whole of the district boards.

As regards taluka local boards, it has not been possible to take the same action with reference to them as it has been with reference to the district local boards, first of all because the number of their members is smaller, their electorate is not as satisfactory as pointed out by the Committee, and there is also a further question—a very important question—of the panchayats, the whole of which, both the taluka boards and panchayat question, is being worked out by an officer who has been appointed on special duty. I must remind the Honourable Member of the provision of the paragraph in the Committee's report which he will remember. The Committee say: "In this case (the taluka local boards) also we consider that there should be a majority and recommend that the number of members of these boards should ordinarily be 18, six of whom are to be nominated." Before this report came out Government had already accepted the resolution of the Honourable Member that "this Council recommends the Governor in Council may be pleased to consider whether the number of elective members of such taluka and district local boards shall not be less than two-thirds of the board." Government has carried out that undertaking with reference practically to the whole of the district local boards. It is quite prepared to carry out the same undertaking with reference to more advanced taluka local boards (there are some here which have not advanced although they have existed for the last 25 years) as soon as the new Bill on which Mr. Martin has been at work is passed, but they are not prepared to give that undertaking until that Bill is considered and until the whole question has been thoroughly threshed out. The whole thing comes back to what we were talking about yesterday. The question of taluka local boards has got to come up again. It may or it may not be that some taluka local boards may be abolished and their place may be taken possibly by district councils.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL has quoted the Government of India's resolution on local self-government and the Acts of other provinces. But we must remember that in some other Presidencies the taluka is not a unit but that the sub-division is the unit and it is for consideration whether a sub-divisional board would be more suitable than a taluka board. The evidence taken by the Committee, I must observe, has not been very conclusive in many ways, and those who have seen, as I have seen, the working of both the sub-divisional and taluka local boards, may be inclined to doubt whether the decision arrived at by the Local Boards Committee on this particular point can be accepted as whole-heartedly or universally as Mr. PATEL desires it should be. Anyhow, as I said, matters cannot be taken further at present. The undertaking was given in August 1915 that Government accepted this recommendation of this Council as then moved by the Honourable Member. They have given effect to this undertaking as regards

TWO-THIRDS TO BE ELECTED IN TALUKA LOCAL BOARDS: NON-OFFICIAL VICE-PRESIDENTS FOR LOCAL BOARDS.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. G. S. Curtis; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; the President.]

district local boards, and as regards taluka local boards they promised to take it into consideration when the question of the constitution of these boards is taken up. I would only remind the Honourable Member that as a member of the Committee he has shown grounds for considering that the electorate of the taluka local boards seemed to him unsatisfactory. I have not the figures handy but I could bring home to him that the electorate in many cases is very minute, that the number of land-holders who pay altogether the land revenue of not less than Rs. 48 per annum is extremely small and minute. The number of persons holding immoveable property of not less than Rs. 5,000 is almost non-existent in many cases. In many cases the persons residing in the taluka with an annual net earning from any occupation are extremely small and pensioners and so on. So the electorates in taluka local boards are minute and consequently haste and sudden increase in the elective majority in these boards might be fraught with the gravest consequences. But as I say the discussion has already gone on quite long enough and I would ask the Honourable Member to accept my assurance that Government have no desire to go back on the position taken up by them in 1915.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I am very thankful to accept the assurance given by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS on behalf of Government and I withdraw my resolution.

Resolution by leave withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 5. The Honourable Mr. PATEL.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—The resolution which stands in my name reads thus:—

"This Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council may be pleased to rule that no officer of Government shall stand as a candidate for the office of Vice-President of any local board of which any other officer of Government is President."

According to the Reports on the Administration of Local Boards for the year 1914-15 there are in all 241 local boards in the Presidency. Of these, 26 are district boards and 215 are taluka boards. All these latter boards without any exception have official Presidents and most of them have official Vice-Presidents.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Is the Honourable Member speaking of taluka boards or district boards?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—There are 215 taluka boards. Not one of them has got non-official President and only a few have got non-official Vice-Presidents.

My friends from Central, Southern and Sind Divisions will, I am sure, tell this Council whether in their respective divisions they have any and, if so, how many non-official Vice-Presidents for their local boards. Knowing as I do something about the local boards of the Northern Division which I have the honour to represent in this Council I am bound to say that the number of non-official Vice-Presidents in my division is only 3. Out of 6 districts boards, only one and out of 41 taluka boards only two have non-official Presidents. If I am wrong, my Honourable friend Mr. PRATT is here to correct me. Section 27 of the local boards Act, 1884, provides that if the President is a salaried servant of Government the board shall elect one of its members to be Vice-President. Then again, there are ample safeguards in case of a board making an undesirable or unsuitable selection. No appointment of a Vice-President is to be valid until it is approved by Government and he is removable from office by Government for misconduct or neglect of or incapacity to perform his duty.

When the Bill on the subject was being discussed in the Council the policy of Government on this question was stated as follows:—"When he (officer) is President he will have an elected Vice-President who will be under instruction and training on the duties of President. The Vice-President may exercise any of the powers of President and it will be in our instructions to official Presidents to leave the duty of presiding at meetings as far as possible to the elected Vice-President." In accordance with the policy so announced Government in May 1887 issued instructions that where there is an official (i. e., a salaried servant of Government) President he will have under him an elected Vice-President for the purpose of instruction and training in the duties of President and he should therefore leave the duty of presiding at meetings as far as possible to the elected Vice-President. These instructions, as the Local Boards Committee recently appointed by Government has very rightly remarked, have remained practically a dead-letter. In the inquiry before the Committee the evidence in this question was so clear, so emphatic and so overwhelming that the Committee in paragraph 16 of their report had to observe as follows :—

"The question of President and Vice-President may next be considered; there is a general concensus of agreement that the Vice-President should be an elected non-official and that ample powers should be delegated to him by the President if the President is an official; in fact, it should be recognized that it is the duty of the official President to train the non-official Vice-President in methods of administration. Orders to this effect which are quoted below were issued by Government in Government Resolution No. 2833, dated 7th May 1887 :—

"Section 29 (b) of the Local Boards Act contemplates the deputation of powers and duties by every President of a local board to the Vice-President as an ordinary feature of the administration; and if, in addition to the powers and duties deputed to the Vice-President absolutely, the President were to depute to him certain other powers and duties to be exercised and performed by him only when the President himself is absent from the head-quarters of the board or from the district such deputation would hold good during any temporary vacancy in the office of the President but these orders have remained practically a dead-letter. Where the President continues to be an official these orders should now be enforced."

The Royal Commission on decentralization in their report also recommend that rural boards should, when the President is a nominated official, have an elected non-official as Vice-President.

It may be argued that the Act does not debar the board from electing a non-official as Vice-President if the members choose to do so; and that freedom of voting is not in any way restricted. This sounds excellent in theory. But who that knows the omnipotence of the Collector in his district could say that any non-official could dare to stand as a candidate against his wishes.

This is a factor which Your Excellency and the Government must always bear in mind when forming pious wishes for the gradual and sure development of local self-government in British India. It is precisely for this reason that myself and my non-official friends insist on every occasion that such wishes should be put in black and white and in peremptory words. If in the instructions of May 1887 definite orders had been issued, enjoining the appointment of non-official Vice-President in every case in which the President was an official, there was some chance of the orders being carried out in some cases. Precatory instructions and even mere implications may be more than enough in such matters as increase of revenue, surveillance, press law and the like, but they are not worth the paper on which they are inserted where they are intended to help the people on towards self-government. This, my Lord, I know, is an unpleasant truth to tell, but yet it is true as the fate of the 1887 instructions proves.

My Lord, if there is really any genuine desire on the part of Government to train the people of this country in local self-government definite orders should be issued for the appointment of non-official Vice-Presidents.

NON-OFFICIAL VICE-PRESIDENTS FOR LOCAL BOARDS.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; Rao Bahadur Ganesh Krishna Sathe; Mr. G. S. Curtis.]

Before I conclude I have one more observation to make. After I gave notice of this Resolution, I was reading Cumming's Local Board Manual with a view to get at the exact position of a Vice-President of Local Board in Law and under executive orders from time to time. Under one of the sections I found noted the Resolution of May 1887 to which I just now referred I was then in the Member's Reading Room which your Excellency's courteous consideration for the non-officials has placed at our disposal. I thought, I ought to read the whole text of the Resolution. I therefore wrote to the Clerk in charge of the Secretariat Library for the same and added that I wanted to see it in connection with a Resolution I intended to move at this meeting. He replied that as the Resolution was not for publication I should write to the Secretary of the General Department for it. I did so and enclosed with my letter the reply I got from the Clerk. The Secretary took five days to tell me that the rules of his Department did not permit him to comply with my request. The Council will kindly excuse me for my inability to place before them the full text of the Resolution which, as I have stated above, requires an official President to train up an elected Vice-President. It is a matter for regret that Mr. Cumming, an outsider, could have access to the Secretariat papers but a non-official member of this Council could not, even when he needs them in connection with the business on the aggenda of this Council.

The Honourable Ráo Bahádur GANESH KRISHNA SATHE:—Your Excellency,—To be consistent with the attitude which I had taken yesterday on the first reading of the Local Boards Bill I would request my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL to postpone the consideration of this question for some future time. My reasons for this suggestion are these. These questions have come before us on many occasions. It was in consequence of a Resolution of my Honourable friend Mr. PATEL that a committee came to be appointed and that committee unanimously recommended that the Vice-Presidents should be non-officials, and, if my memory serves me right, I think Government has not yet taken any action on that recommendation.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—May I interrupt the Honourable Member. The wording of the report is:—"We are constrained therefore to recommend that the law stand unchanged but that executive orders be given that no official should be permitted to serve as Vice-President where a suitable non-official gentleman can be found."

The Honourable Ráo Bahádur SATHE:—I do not want to go into details. My point is this, that as Government has not yet taken any action I have every hope that Government is going to favourably consider the unanimous recommendation of the committee over which the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE presided. However, my contention is that let us wait till Government takes action on that report and wait till it is placed before the Council in the form of a Bill. In fact all that this Resolution wants to carry out is already there in the report of the committee and if, as has been stated yesterday, the whole question of local boards is going to be considered and if there is a Select Committee sitting on the other part of the Bill so far as district boards are concerned, I think it would be better if we postpone the consideration of this question until we exactly know what view Government is going to take. For aught I know, there is no reason to apprehend that Government would not accept the unanimous decision of the committee. In this state of things my submission is that this Resolution should not be pressed now. Let us hope that the committee's recommendation will be carried out in the form of the Bill which is going to come before us Then it will be time for the Honourable Mr PATEL and others to make suggestions in the light of this Resolution. Personally as one of the members of that committee I do say that every opportunity should be given to non-officials to show their competency to work. If Government officials stand as candidates many of the non-officials have to withdraw from candidature.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE :—Your Excellency,—There seems to be a good deal of misunderstanding in regard to the recommendations of the committee over which I had the honour to preside, and perhaps it will shorten matters if I point out one or two small mistakes.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL has quoted paragraph 16 of our report and he left the impression on me and I think on other members of this Council that that paragraph was intended to refer to all local boards, district and taluka. That paragraph refers only to district local boards. The latter paragraph of the committee's report dealt with taluka local boards and our recommendations with regard to taluka local boards are different from those with regard to district local boards. I will read out paragraph 36 :—

"The discharge of the functions of the Vice-President of a Local Board requires a man with leisure, vigour, aptitude for public affairs, and public spirit; and it is clearly established by the general body of opinion that this combination of qualities cannot often be found. Where it is found, there seems to be no disinclination either on the part of the officials or on the part of the local bodies to utllize such services. The law on the point is already sufficiently elastic: it permits the election of the President when the Government so authorize; and it compels the election of the Vice-President. In the Province of Sind opinion is almost unanimous in favour of the retention of the Sub-Divisional officer in the post of President. A general rule that the post whether of President or Vice-President must be held by a non-official would lead to serious consequences in many talukas, where no gentleman with an aptitude and inclination for public business can be found. We are constrained, therefore, to recommend that the law stand unchanged, but that executive orders be given that no official should be permitted to serve as Vice-President, where a suitable non-official gentleman can be found."

Now, Sir, in the light of that recommendation and in view of the arguments we had yesterday as regards the Bill that is referred to a Select Committee, I venture to associate myself with the suggestion of the Honourable Ráo Bahádur SATHE that it is much better to postpone further discussion on this matter and to await the result of the deliberations of the Select Committee and if necessary to deal with this question of the official or non-official Vice-President of taluka local boards also in the form of an amended Bill.

The Honourable Mr. PANDURANG ANANT DESAI :—Your Excellency,—The proposals made by the Honourable Ráo Bahádur SATHE and the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE are not acceptable to me. I cannot understand why this Resolution should be postponed on the ground that the Bill would be before the Select Committee. The Bill which came before the Council yesterday related to a particular portion of the boards, namely district local boards. This Resolution relates both to district local boards as well as to taluka local boards, and I cannot understand how the matter covered by this Resolution could be discussed before the Select Committee which was appointed in connection with the Bill.

The Honourable Ráo Bahádur G. K. SATHE :—My point was that in a Bill to be introduced on the report of Mr. Martin we would be in a position to know what actual attitude has been taken by Government, and then it will be right for us to put into the Bill this provision of non-official President.

The Honourable Mr. DESAI :—My reply is, if the recommendation has been unanimously made by Mr. LAWRENCE'S committee, if we have got this Resolution before us, and if this Resolution is discussed, there will be additional strength if the majority of this Council comes to the conclusion that what this Resolution demands is reasonable, and Government will be in a position to see that the demand which has been made by this Resolution is a demand which ought to be accepted at once. So my submission is that the consideration of this Resolution should not be postponed.

The Honourable Mr. F. G. PRATT :—Your Excellency,—I thoroughly endorse everything that has been said by the Honourable Ráo Bahádur SATHE and the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE and have very little to add except with regard to one small matter, and that is the wording of the recommendations which refers to Government officers standing as candidates. I would like to explain that it very often happens in the majority of cases a Government officer does not stand as a candidate in the ordinary sense of the term. Standing as a candidate would surely imply that there is a contested election of two or three rival candidates. But in a great many cases what happens is that the members of the board concerned cannot conceive of any other and do not wish for any other Vice-President than the official whom they have been accustomed to trust and with whom, with all deference to the Honourable Mr. PATEL, they are quite content. Such an official in the majority of cases is asked to be the Vice-President. It will be remembered that we have recommended in our report that wherever a suitable non-official Vice-President is forthcoming we would welcome the appointment of such Vice-President. But the fact is that such Vice-Presidents, in the great majority of cases, are not forthcoming and do not wish to come forward. The Honourable Mr. PATEL recommends that a peremptory order should be passed that no Government officer should stand as a candidate for election or that an order should be issued that no Government officer should fill the post of Vice-President. But it is not possible, if a non-official is not forthcoming, to pass a peremptory order that a non-official must come forward as a candidate for election to the post of Vice-President.

The Honourable Mr. DATTATRAYA VENKATESH BELVI :—Your Excellency,—The question which this Resolution embodies is to my mind a very important one. It is proposed by my Honourable friend Ráo Bahádur SATHE that the consideration of this question do stand over pending the report of the special officer who has been appointed by Government and pending the drafting of a Bill. Such a proposal would have been welcome to me had it been coupled with an assurance as to the period of time during which we may expect to get this report and the proposed Bill. I have been in this Council for the last six years and I remember that this question of a consolidated Bill so far as local boards were concerned was mooted so far back as 1912. If I remember aright I think my friend Mr. R. P. Karandikar of Satara had put a question to Government on the point. He asked Government when it was expected that a Local Boards Bill would be ready for introduction in the Council, and, if my memory serves me right, my friend was told that Government expected to introduce such a Bill very shortly. Four long years have passed. But there is no further information on the point so far.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS :—I would ask the Honourable Member, if he does not mind, to give some reference to the proceedings of the meeting of 1912. I do not remember it and my recollection does not confirm the impression of my Honourable friend.

The Honourable Mr. BELVI :—My Honourable friend Mr. CURTIS will take from me my word when I say that one of the non-official members had asked for the information and we were very frequently told that a Bill was going to be introduced very shortly.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS :—Again I asked the Honourable Member to give us some details of one single inquiry with reference to Local Boards Act.

The Honourable Mr. BELVI :—I remember very well that such an inquiry was made of the Secretary to the Legislative Council. I have not got the reference just now, but that reference can be verified as to the question that was put by my friend Mr. Karandikar. At any rate, for the last six years that I have been in this Council I am under the impression that we have been told that this Local Boards Bill was coming on very soon. I do not mean to say that six years more will be required for Mr. Martin to complete and submit his report. If Government will be pleased to tell me that Mr. Martin's report will be ready and that they will be in a position to introduce the Bill within a reasonable time, say within the next six months or during the current year, I may support the motion of my Honourable friend Ráo Bahádur SATHE that the consideration of this matter should stand over. Unless some such assurance is furnished to this Council, I believe it will be extremely unwise to postpone the consideration of this business. A proposal to postpone the consideration of a Resolution is very often simply a way to shelve the Resolution indefinitely. As my Honourable friend Mr. DESAI says, nothing could be lost by considering this Resolution now on its merits if it commends itself to the majority of this Council.

Now what are the facts? The facts are that so far as taluka local boards in the Presidency are concerned, there is an overwhelmingly large number of taluka local boards of which the Vice-Presidents are Mamlatdars. We were told by my Honourable friend Mr. PRATT that Mamlatdars as a rule, or Government servants as a rule, do not show any anxiety to stand as candidates. It seems to me that my friend does not know the real state of affairs. When in a taluka local board it is well known that the Mamlatdar wishes to fill the post—the only post of responsibility—does it stand to reason to believe that any non-official member will come forward and oppose the Mamlatdar? And whenever a non-official member comes forward, what is the result? The result is that he has to displease the Mamlatdar or he finds that the majority of the taluka local board members do not support his candidature. It is but human nature that when there are two candidates to oppose each other, one official and the other non-official, people should side with the official. For instance, suppose that when I stood as a candidate my friend the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE had stood as a candidate to oppose me. Would I have the shred of a chance of success as against the Commissioner of my own division? That is what happens in the case of taluka local boards. I know of one case in Belgaum in which a pleader friend of mine stood as a candidate for the post of Vice-President and he stood successfully, and when that man was elected he came to know that the Mamlatdar was greatly displeased with him and he had considerable difficulty in carrying out his duties. In fact, non-officials do not want to contest the post as against Mamlatdars. Now when there are official Presidents, where is the need of having a Mamlatdar or other Government officer to stand as a candidate for the Vice-Presidentship? There is no charm in a man's being a member of the taluka local board if he is not to enjoy any power whatever. Why should people in villages take the trouble of attending meetings if they have no sufficient interest or influence? At present the taluka local board means the Mamlatdar and the district local board means the Collector, and all other members of the taluka or district local boards are ornamental figure heads. They have got no powers. They simply are there to please the head of the office—in the taluka the Mamlatdar, in the district the Collector. In view of this state of things it is necessary to ask public servants not to stand as candidates for the post of a Vice-President. That is the only way in which Government can encourage non-official members to do their duty zealously as members of taluka local and district boards. I submit that just as Government have been pleased to say in a recent Resolution that five district local boards at any rate in this Presidency will have nominated non-official Presidents, Government should be pleased to make a similar declaration in the case of all taluka local boards also. There is no legal bar to the course suggested under the law as it stands now. Under section 27 of the present District Local Boards Act Government can issue an executive order asking Government servants not to seek election as Vice-Presidents of taluka local boards or district local boards.

NON-OFFICIAL VICE-PRESIDENTS FOR LOCAL BOARDS.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Dattatraya Venkatesh Belvi; Mr. Venkatesh Shriniwas Naik.]

There is no difficulty in the path of Government in doing it. What is required is that there should be a will on the part of Government to appoint non-official vice-presidents. The question of president and vice-president is extremely important. It is absolutely necessary to give to the people real power. Unless real power is given to the people, they won't take any trouble or interest whatever in matters of local self-government. There is no difficulty in the case of municipalities. We know non-official gentlemen are held competent to hold the presidentship of many municipal corporations in the mofussil. Such large cities as Surat, Karachi and Ahmedabad and numerous other parts of the presidency have been given that privilege and right, and that right has been exercised to the satisfaction both of Government and the public. Why should not similar rights be conceded in the case of taluka local boards? Is it more difficult to discharge the duties of a taluka local board than it is in the case of a district or a city municipality or any other municipality? I really fail to understand the difficulty which lies in the path of Government. It seems to me that Government officers who now enjoy these powers are unwilling to part with them under some pretext or other. With these few words I support my honourable friend's resolution.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur VENKATESH SHRINIWAS NAIK:—May it please Your Excellency,—I have very great pleasure in supporting this resolution, although I was not able to share entirely with the views expressed by my friend, the Honourable Mr. PATEL, in the last two resolutions. I do so, this time also, with a very small limitation. The question of having non-official vice-presidents to all the Local Boards entirely depends upon the finding of suitable persons. In the case of District Local Boards there will not be any difficulty, as the members recruited to these Bodies are generally of a much higher calibre than those on the Taluka Local Boards. It is only in the case of these Taluka Local Boards that we may not find suitable non-official gentlemen in all the talukas, but where they are available they alone should be elected as vice-presidents. These Taluka Local Boards are the rural schools for training non-official gentlemen in the matter of local self-government and it is a pity that after the existence of these Bodies for the last 33 years not a few in each taluka should be able te come forward to take up the work of vice presidents. This I rather attribute to a great extent to the tendency of Mamlatdars or other officers of Government to crave for all the powers in the taluka for themselves than for want of one or two intelligent and self-sacrificing gentlemen in each taluka. The constitution of these Taluka Local Boards chiefly consists of village officers, petty vatandars or big rayots or other persons greatly under the influence of Mamlatdars or other officers of Government. It will be rather difficult for these non-officials even if they come forward to take up the work of vice-presidents, to get themselves elected if such officers offer as candidates. These local officers, instead of standing themselves as candidates, should encourage and try to bring more non-officials to the front and train them up in the matter of local affairs. When there are official presidents at the head of these Boards to guide, there are no reasons to apprehend any failure of administration. On the other hand wherever there are non-officials as vice-presidents they generally manage their affairs more carefully, creditably and with greater co-operation. Out of the 35 Taluka Local Boards that failed to hold the minimum number of meetings during 1914-1915 there were only two Local Boards, viz., Panvel and Vaghra, with non-officials as vice-presidents, which shows that the non-official gentlemen are more careful and work with greater co-operation than the official vice-presidents. Some of these official vice-presidents who are generally the Mamlatdars have a tendency to conduct the business of the Boards more arbitrarily due of course to their official superiority and influence over the other members. Now if we make a hard and fast rule that the vice-presidents should be non-officials only and no suitable person is at all available in the taluka, the administration of the Taluka Local Board will either be unsatisfactory or will be more in the hands of the Sub-Overseer or the Maistry and the Karkun. My friend, Mr. PATEL, may hold the opinion that, as long as there is latitude for the Local officials to stand as candidates for the vice-presidentships, they do not care to find out a suitable non-official gentleman in the taluka and the people will remain behind as during these 32 years. If Government should issue executive orders that, except in exceptional cases where not a single non-official person is available in the taluka, Government officers should not offer themselves as candidates for vice-presidentships. The Collectors and Commissioners who are required to approve of the elections of Government officers as vice-presidents should, before according their approval, satisfy themselves by making inquiries whether sufficient opportunity was given to non-officials and none were available in the taluka to take up the work of the vice-president, and if Government were also to appreciate the efforts of the Mamlatdars in securing non-official gentlemen for the vice-presidentships, I think that my friend will have no reasons for apprehension.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH :—Your Excellency, I think my Honourable friends have put forward several arguments in support of this resolution but I would like to add one more. What I submit to Your Excellency is that Government do recognize that it is against the official discipline and officially improper that Government official should take part in elections, and they always show their disapproval to Government officials taking such part.

Now I submit to Your Excellency whether it is consistent with this principle that the official himself should go in for election which means that he asks people to vote for him. Either he asks personally, through friends; in any case he gives the public to understand that it is his wish that people should vote for him. n that case is it consistent with the general disciplinary principle that Government have adopted that persons within his charge should be placed in such a position as to earn his good will by voting or procuring votes for him or incurring his displeasure by voting for or helping his rival? Is it right that Government officials should be put in that position? I, therefore, submit that it would be carrying out the wishes of Government in the matter of discipline which they adopt with reference to outsiders that Government officials should never stand for election.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—Your Excellency, the view that Government are prepared to take on this resolution is that expressed by the Honourable Mr. SATHE. The section of the Act which deals with nomination and election of presidents and vice-presidents is section 27 which will have to be further considered before the new bill is framed. As a matter of fact, at the present moment, the non-official vice-presidents are a good deal more numerous than the Honourable Mover's resolution has given us the impression to be the case.

There are 13 of District Local Boards and 34 or 35 of the Taluka Local Boards with non-official vice-presidents. It is unfortunately the case that for out of the way talukas it is not possible to get as vice-president a man of industry and vigour It is a clearly established fact I think that this combination of qualities may not always be found.

Now, Sir, I am going to say that it is quite impossible for Government to accept this resolution. I put it this way, that we cannot consider the post of vice-president as apart from the post of president. In fact in 5 District Boards the presidency has been definitely assigned to non-official presidents. If the president is a non-official, it might be extremely desirable that the vice-president should be an official.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL :—I have nothing to say in that case. I say where an official is president the vice-president should be a non-official.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Curtis; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel.]

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—In any case where the vice-presidents are concerned the question will be taken into consideration when the Bill that has particular reference to taluka boards comes on and until that Bill comes forward Government cannot take any action.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I submit that the spech of my Honourable friend Rao Bahadur SATHE has confused the real point at issue. The Lawrence Committee has recommended that the law in this respect should stand unchanged, but that executive orders should issue. What is then the meaning in waiting for the draft Bill of Mr. Martin? Mr. Martin is surely not going to insert a clause in that Bill providing that an official shall not stand as a candidate for the office of vice-president where another official is president. If Government assures this Council that Mr. Martin's Bill will contain such a clause, I am perfectly ready to withdraw my resolution. I see no signs of any such assurance. What is then the good of waiting for that Draft Bill? I do not say that in all cases officials should not be allowed to stand for the office of the vice-president. I merely say that where official is president another official should not be allowed to stand as a candidate for the post of vice-president, so that the result would be that where there is an official president there would always be under him a non-official.

Then there is one misunderstanding which the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE'S speech is likely to create. He seems to suggest that paragraph 16 of the Local Board Committee report applies to District Boards only. That paragraph reads:—

"There is a general consensus of agreement that the Vice-President should be an elected non-official and that ample power should be delegated to him by the President if the President is an official; in fact that it should be recognized that it is the duty of the official President to train the non-official Vice-President in methods of administration. Orders to this effect which are quoted below were issued by Government in Government Resolution No. 2833, dated the 7th May 1887."

It is perfectly clear from this that paragraph 16 refers to district as well as taluka boards.

Then again it has been suggested that the recommendation of the Committee does not go so far as to say that Government should issue executive orders that no officer of Government shall be eligible for the office of vice-president of every Local Board of which another officer of Government is president. My reply to this argument is contained in the minute of dissent of one of the members of the Committee in regard to this particular question. He says:

"I now come to the Committee's recommendations with regard to the Vice-President. The evidence in favour of having elected non-official Vice-President both for District and Taluka Boards, is so overwhelming that the Committee in paragraph 16 of their report very rightly observed that there is a general concensus of agreement that the Vice-President should be an elected non-official. In view of this evidence thus noted by the Committee one should have thought that the Committee would recommend the necessary change in the existing law to meet the requirements of the situation. It is most unfortunate that when the actual question of making necessary recommendation comes to be considered they, by majority, hold that the law should stand unchanged and that it should be left to Government to give executive orders that no official be permitted to serve as Vice-President where a suitable non-official can be found. In support of this recommendation the Committee observe that it is clearly established by the general body of opinion that the combination of qualities necessary for the discharge of the functions of the Vice-President cannot often be found. This statement of the Committee is evidently inconsistent with their finding that there is a concensus of opinion in favour of elected non-official Vice-President, and to my mind indicates a curious confusion as to the appreciation of the evidence before them.

NON-OFFICIAL VICE-PRESIDENTS FOR LOCAL BOARDS.

[Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; the President.] [16TH MARCH 1917.]

The Committee further add that for the discharge of the functions of this office a man with leisure, vigor, aptitude for public affairs and public spirit is necessary. Is this combination of qualities to be found in the present-day official Vice-President? Are they men with sufficient leisure and, if so, what about the all round cry that the revenue officers are so overburdened with executive and administrative functions that the sooner they are relieved of their extra duties in connection with the Local Boards and Municipalities the better? Are they the people with aptitude for public business and public spirit? Is it not true that you can easily find among the non-officials more men with public spirit and aptitude for public business than among the officials?

The Committee further observe that there is no disinclination on the part of officials to utilise the services of qualified non-official gentlemen wherever they can be found. I am not prepared to support this statement. I know of a number of instances where the officers of Government have become Presidents and Vice-Presidents of Municipalities where non-official gentlemen far superior to them in ability with plenty of leisure, business aptitude and public spirit had to remain in the back ground.

Whatever may be the personal views of the majority of the Committee the fact remains that there is an almost unanimous opinion in favour of elected non-official Vice-Presidents for both District and Taluka Boards and the Decentralisation Commission also supports this opinion.

With these words I trust the Council will accept this resolution.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I can only reiterate to Honourable members what I have reiterated to them very often without much success hitherto. Let me once again place before them the Government position as clearly as I can. Government some time ago appointed a Committee to enquire into the question of local self-government. That Committee came into existence because—I have expressed my view before to the Council, I have told the Honourable member so privately and I now do so publicly—Government came to the conclusion that the whole question of local self-government was in a thoroughly unsatisfactory condition and wanted considerable advance. That Committee has reported and as a result of that Government has decided to bring in a comprehensive Bill to deal with the whole question. I very much hope, for very obvious reasons, that the Bill will be brought in in December, before my term of office comes to an end. I would therefore like to reiterate that I think it is most unfortunate that these resolutions should be brought forward at this particular time with a view, no doubt, to try and force Government's hands when I do consider, in all fairness, that Government should be given absolute latitude to deal with these questions from an executive point of view. That is the position of Government, and it is not from any want of desire to forward local self-government that Government is taking up this positon. It is not that we do not entirely and cordially agree with the principles of this resolution. It is because we think it fairer and more proper in every way, from an executive point of view, that Government, after taking into consideration all the recommendations of the Committee, after receiving individual opinions of non-officials from many parts of the country, should be given full liberty of action in working out this Bill. When it is brought in it will be for the Legislative Council to deal with it as they think fit, and that being our position it is clearly impossible for Government to accept this resolution.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—I beg leave to postpone this resolution and the next one if Your Excellency assures me that the Bill will come up in December next.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I can only say that I am very much obliged to the Honorable member. In all fairness, I think Government have not taken up an unfair attitude on the matter. I quite recognise that the Honourable member brings these resolutions forward out of a sincere desire for an advance in local self-government. I fully appreciate that, but as I said this morning, I am inclined to think that on this occasion he is allowing his zeal to outrun his discretion.

NON-OFFICIAL VICE-PRESIDENTS FOR LOCAL BOARDS: RECOGNITION OF MATRICULATION FOR GOVERNMENT SERVICE: PRINCIPAL OF THE KARNATIC COLLEGE.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [The President; Mr. Raghunath Purshotam Paranjpye.]

Resolutions Nos. 5 and 6 by leave postponed.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 7:—

"This Council recommends that Government be pleased to represent to the supreme Government that it is desirable to recognise as qualified for Government service students who have passed the Matriculation Examination of the Bombay University provided they have attended a recognised school for two years just before their examination and produce a certificate of satisfactory character and progress from the head of such a school."

The Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE.

The Honourable Mr. RAGHUNATH PURSHOTTAM PARANJPYE:—I understand that Government are in negotiation with the University on this matter, and I do not want to force the hands of Government on this point. Therefore I want this resolution to be postponed to the next meeting of the Legislative Council.

Resolution by leave postponed to the next meeting of the Legislative Council.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 8, The Honourable Mr. PARANJPE.

The Honourable Mr. RAGHUNATH PURSHOTAM PARANJPYE:—Your Excellency,—The resolution that I have the honour to propose for the acceptance of this Council reads as follows:—

"This Council recommends that in connection with the proposed arrangements for the establishment of an Arts College at Dharwar Government be pleased to remove the condition that the Principal of that College is to be a European member of the Educational Service."

Your Excellency, the whole Presidency was deeply gratified when it read that Government had finally decided to act up to the resolution that was accepted by this Council five years ago recommending the starting of an Arts College in the Karnatic and thus removing for ever the legitimate grievance of our Canarese friends. Though we would have been very glad to see a full Arts College started immediately, we are quite prepared in this time of financial stringency to accept the half loaf just offered and await the whole loaf till better times—times, let us hope, not very far remote from today—and I hope Government will be able to give my Honourable friend Mr. PATHAN the assurance he asks for in a resolution that is to follow. My Lord, the gratification that was felt at the announcement was, however, considerably qualified by the element of racial discrimination that has been introduced into it. I fully admit that the question of appointments to any office must be ordinarily left to the administrative head and the Legislative Council can only raise the point when an obvious injustice is done or a principle involved.

Now in the case before us a principle is obviously involved. We have been claiming for the last eighty years the full consequences of the assurance solemnly given by Parliament in 1833 that no Indian shall by reason of his race, religion or creed be considered disqualified for any office under the Crown. It is almost too late in the History of our Country to be quoting this Act, but in the present case an attempt is being made to go behind it. In matters of Education in particular racial distinctions are peculiarly objectionable and have very serious consequences on the minds of the taught. But the Government of Bombay have, I am very sorry to find, not yet learnt this elementary principle which, may I add, is agreed to even by such a great friend of Indian aspirations as Sir Valentine Chirol. Last year in the case of the appointment of Professor Burnett Hurst and the consequent resignation of Professor Muzumdar, Government had to give an assurance that the thing won't be repeated again and racial distinction would not be made when a vacancy again occurs in the Sydenham College. But all of us thought that the assurance was not applicable only to that college but to all similar institutions. But as the French say—l'appetit vient en mangeant—appetite comes by eating and Government have in their Press Note publicly enunciated a similar invidious distinction. The Press Note reads thus :—

PRINCIPAL OF THE KARNATIC COLLEGE.

[Mr. Raghunath Purshotam Paranjpye.] [16TH MARCH 1917.]

"Subject to the sanction of the Government of India, His Excellency the Governor in Council has decided to establish a second grade Arts College at Dharwar with a European Principal, belonging to the Indian Educational Service, on condition that the full amount of Rs. 2,00,000 undertaken to be collected for that purpose by Rao Bahadur S. K. Rodda and Rao Bahadur R. C. Artal, I.S.O., are paid into the Government treasury before the end of March 1917. It is hoped to obtain the necessary sanction of the Government of India in time to open the College, which will, in the first instance, be located in the Dharwar Training College Buildings, by the beginning of June 1917."

I may say in passing that in the case of another College managed by a Board whose President is a high official of Government, a similar contingency has arisen and an Indian Professor of twenty-five years' standing who is acknowledged to be perhaps the strongest man on the college staff is not being allowed even to act as Principal and the high official is taking even a questionable line of action in setting aside a resolution regularly passed by the Board in the absence of that official and trying to force upon the Board a European of only three or four years' service and less than twenty-seven years of age. But to come back to the question of the Dharwar College, I really fail to see the object of the words "a European member of the Indian Educational Service". I might have something to say even on the words "Indian Educational Service" as against "Provincial Educational Service." If I may refer to the history of these services as given in the recent report of the Royal Services Commission the Provincial Educational Service has been all along unjustly treated :

"Higher Service is divided into an Imperial and a Provincial Branch; theoretically equal and parallel in status, but the first recruited in Europe and the second in India. The original object of this distinction was to find some means by which the different rates of salary for Europeans and Indians could conveniently be enforced. This device might have proved workable had the provincial been kept as much a corps d'élite as the Imperial section. But it broke down completely when the provincial ranks were opened to officers with ordinary educational qualifications. The inevitable result has been that the provincial section in practice drifted into a definitely inferior position, to the detriment of men of really high standing in it, who under the theory of parallel services have been unable to find escape by promotion into what has in fact become a higher service. This has led to heart burnings and scarcely one of the witnesses who came before us was in favour of maintaining the existing position. We are entirely in sympathy with this attitude. To organise the department on the basis of the accident of difference of salary is to court confusion. We recommend that this idea be abandoned."

It cannot be denied that even at present it contains men of long service and ability, but they have never had an opportunity of showing what they are worth by being placed in an administrative position; and except for the accident of a European degree—not in all cases of a very high merit—there is not much to choose between many members of the two services. But it has been all along a case of giving a dog a bad name before hanging him. I should have welcomed the experiment of putting a College definitely under an Indian from that service and I can give names if wanted.

PRINCIPAL OF THE KARNATIC COLLEGE.

[16TH MARCH 1917.] [Mr. Raghunath Purshotam Paranjpye.]

But I shall be yielding and recognize the difference in importance attached—though not always justly—to the two services and allow that in the present circumstances an officer of the I. E. S. is required. In this place let me make it clear that I have not the least objection to Professor Rawlinson, who has been selected at present for the post of the Principal. But why the word "European"? In this connection I may be treated to the elegant story of snakes in Iceland and be told that there being no Indian at present in the I. E. S., I need not make such a fuss about the word. But to this I would reply in the same strain that an inhabitant of Iceland would be considered a lunatic if he lays traps everywhere for snakes, brings up mongooses or always keeps on his person the Brunton lancet ready for a snake bite. Neither does the Government of Finland keep a Kheddah Department for hunting elephants, nor the Bombay Government instruct the Collector of Bombay to grant licenses for hunting giraffes or polar bears. If there are no Indians in the I. E. S. in Bombay why should the word European be specially mentioned? Are we not justified in regarding it as an insult to us as Indians and as one means of stopping all our further aspirations? We are in hopes that if not at present at least in the near future Indians will be largely recruited for the Indian Educational Service. Even the Royal Commission makes a recommendation that one-fourth of the cadre in Class I should be Indian immediately while the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL himself goes further and says that in the immediate future in the recruitment for this class one Indian and one European should be alternately selected as far as possible. Are we then to assume that although we are in the near future to have many Indians in Class I responsible posts are not to be given to them? I shall appeal from the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL the Member of Council to the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL the member of the Royal Commission. His minute contains the following:—

"I am prepared to concede that, other things being equal, the caste or community to which a candidate belongs may be taken into consideration, but of late there is an unfortunate tendency to attach undue importance to this consideration and educational and other qualifications are often subordinated to it. In some provinces the prejudice against certain castes has gone so far that the members of these castes have begun to think that Government Service is practically tabooed to them and the accident of belonging to such a caste is regarded as a positive disqualification. I am therefore inclined to support this vague recommendation about the due representation of castes and communities if it is put negatively, i. e. the authorities concerned with the nomination or appointment of candidates should only take care to see that posts in any service are not substantially and unduly monopolized, by any one caste or community, and the existence or otherwise of certain traits of "character" be not assumed necessarily to exist in any individual because he belongs to a certain caste or community. The other limitations that I would introduce on the consideration of this question is that as regards the highest posts, to which the appointments must generally be by selection from among those who have already been in service, the question of the reprensentation of a caste or a community should be regarded as absolutely irrelevant, and that the best man available be selected."

Shall I then be considered very wrong in asking this Council not to allow such a racial stigma to be put upon the Indian as such. I know that the press note may be said to be intended for the first appointment and not for all time. But I have proved that there was no necessity for such a reflection on Indians as such in the beginning of the History—which we all hope is to be a glorious History—of the Karnatic College. In the next case that will arise it would be difficult to get out of the groove once made. I look forward to a time when even the Elphinstone, Deccan (which had long ago for some time an acting Principal in the person of the late Keropant Chhatre) and Gujarat Colleges may have Indian Principals. I think that the ideal state of things is one in which the boys of the country are taught by properly qualified people of that country. In any case even though this consumation is far off, let us not by anything we now do put a disqualification against ourselves, and I hope the members of this Council will accept my resolution which involves only a principle.

The Honourable Mr. MAHADEV BHASKAR CHAUBAL:—Your Excellency,—I should like to make a statement before the Council is flooded with further oratory. Whatever my other faults or defects of character, the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE at least ought not to say that inaccessibility is one of them: and if before giving notice of this Resolution or at least before moving it he had cared to see me or speak to me about it, I could have explained the situation and the circumstances under which this press note was issued. A course which would have saved him the trouble of the speech he has made, and perhaps saved Government from the incisive attack he has thought fit to make on it.

Now let me tell the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE and this Council that issuing a small press note of half a dozen lines is not the process that Government adopts for formulating its educational policy. This press note came to be issued, let me remind the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE, even before we had the necessary sanction of the Government of India. It was issued subject to this sanction being received and in anticipation of it. Why was Government in a hurry like that? and why need Government have proclaimed by a press note facts which were known to this Council and to the public a long time back? Because there were special circumstances, which made the issuing of a press note desirable to encourage the promoters of this college and to refute rumours which had started. Honourable members are aware the establishment of a college for the Karnatic by Government was promised if the inhabitants of the province practically evinced their desire and earnestness for higher education by substantial contributions and approached Government after they had at least collected two lakhs of rupees for the purpose. The promoters in the Karnatic were doing their best to get the amount, but we all know what a fruitful soil this country possesses for starting and floating rumours, and what a reputation for credulity we possess when such rumours are easily believed in and acted upon. In some mysterious way rumours started that Government was going back on its promise of starting this college in the Karnatic and there were applications from other bodies for starting a college in Belgaum, either from the Lingayat community or the Jain community or other communities, and the promoters of this institution from that province came to Government and represented that this rumour had the effect of stopping further contributions to the fund which they expected and of holding back some of the subscriptions which had been promised. It was therefore mainly to facilitate the collection of the requisite funds by these promoters that this press note was issued at that time. When Government had made up their mind to start the long promised college at Dhárwár, they thought that the establishment and organisation of the institution ought to be in capable and experienced hands, that the Head and Principal of this institution ought to be an Indian Educational Service Officer and had come to the conclusion that the only experienced officer they could spare was Mr. Rawlinson. The use of the word European in the press note was more than anything due to this: and Government least expected any one to read the announcement in the press note as a declaration that the Principal of the Dhárwár College was to be an European for all time to come. Having stated to my Honourable friend how the word he considers to be so offending came to be used, let me further state to this Council that whatever the indignant enthusiasm to which the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE has lashed himself in this particular case Government ought not to disregard the wishes and desires of the inhabitants of the Karnatic, for whom and with whose aid this college was going to be established, and I can tell the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE that I have here with me solemn representations from the two main communities of the Karnatic requesting Government not to accept the resolution which the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE has moved in this Council. Besides if anybody ought to know, at least the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE who claims to be in touch with the feelings of the people on a point like this, ought to be certainly aware that the feeling between the two great communities of the Karnatic is by no means as harmonious as it ought to be, and with their knowledge of the state of feeling between these communities Government thought it absolutely necessary that the institution and organization should be entrusted to a person in whom both the communities interested would have perfect confidence. In one part of his speech the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE accidentally lights upon the correct note by observing that the press note was perhaps intended only for the first appointment but with all that he takes it for granted that there is some hidden meaning in the pronouncement of Government against Indians and that Government desired to make a racial distinction. Let me assure this Council that no such distinction was ever present in any shape in the mind of Government, and that other honourable members will not so readily misconceive the intentions of Government. I do not see why the honourable member should read into this innocent pronouncement in the press note a decision on the part of this Government to try and bind succeeding Governments to appoint an European Principal. This Government should only be responsible for the appointment which it thinks proper to make at the present time. Having disclaimed all the ulterior motives that have been imagined owing to the use of the offending word in the press note, I do state on behalf of Government taking into consideration the question of the initial foundation and organisation of the college, taking into consideration the communal differences and feeling between the two great divisions of the people of the province and taking into consideration the subjects, instruction in which it was considered desirable to entrust to the officer to be appointed the Head and Principal of the College, Government do consider it eminently fit that the first principalships of this new college should be held by an European. In the end I only wish that the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE had been kind enough to see me before he made up his mind to move this resolution. I should in that case have explained the situation to him exactly, which would probably have saved the Council this flood of oratory and saved Government the charge of racial distinction which he has chosen to throw upon the intentions of Government in this matter. After this explanation as to how the word "European" came to be used in the press note I do not think there would be any further discussion on this subject.

The Honourable Mr. SALEBHOY KARIMJI BARODAWALLA:—My Lord,—The Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE had the privilege of receiving his education under the auspices of English Universities, and I cannot understand why he should deprive the students in India from receiving education by graduates and educationists from the Universities of England. My Lord, we have to learn a great deal from Englishmen in India and if there is one thing more than another it is that we require the guidance of Englishmen in India.

The Honourable Mr. RAGHUNATH PURSHOTTAM PARANJPYE:—Your Excellency,—After the assurance given to me by the Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL that the word "European" was not intended to cast a racial stigma, I wish to withdraw the resolution. All that I meant was that in the press note, if a European happened to be selected, it should have been mentioned that Mr. Rawlinson had been selected. In that case nobody would have disputed the choice of the Government at all. One other thing I wish to mention. The Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL appears to have said that I should have consulted him. In connection with another resolution last year he wanted to see me personally and I did meet him. I have seen him recently several times and spoken to him on other matters but apparently he appeared to avoid this particular subject. I did not therefore know what to do. I did not want to open a question which he appeared to avoid, especially he is obviously senior to me and therefore it was not possible for me to consult him. Well, one more point. The Honourable Mr. CHAUBAL said that he had received solemn assurances from the two great communities of the Karnatic about the question of the appointment of Principal. I do not know how much importance can be given to it because, on the other hand, I have assurances also. In fact the public meetings which were held at Dhárwár and Belgaum urged that they wanted, if possible, to get an Indian as Principal. However, leaving that aside, I do not know, if we think a course desirable, why we should saddle ourselves with the responsibility of making racial distinctions in this manner even to oblige the susceptibilities of one or two great communities for a short time. With these words I beg to withdraw the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—I only want to thank the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE for having brought this resolution before the Council, because, if he had contended himself with only a private statement from the honourable member in charge of education as suggested by the latter that might not have removed the public misunderstanding nor elicited the open declaration in Council that there was no intention on the part of Government to reserve the Principal's appointment for an European.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 9. The Honourable Sardar SHRINIWAS COOPOOSWAMI MUDLIAR.

The Honourable Sardar SHRINIWAS COOPOOSWAMI MUDLIAR:—Your Excellency,—The resolution that stands in my name reads as follows:—

> "That this Council recommends that Government be pleased to move the Railway Board to provide railway platforms and waiting-rooms for passengers on the Stations on the Barsi Light Railway and specially at Barsi."

This resolution needs no lengthy speech from me, nor are any elaborate reasons necessary, to bring home to you, any conviction in that behalf, as most of us have experienced the inconveniences. The necessity for platforms and waiting-rooms upon this Railway line is a topic much discussed in newspapers for some time past, and during my visit to Pandharpur in December last, I have personally felt these inconveniences and have no hesitation in stating that the complaint in the public press is not in the least exaggerated, and I earnestly hope that the authorities concerned, will, as soon as practicable, supply this long-felt necessity. On inquiring further into this grievance, I learn that during the hot season and the rains, it is painful to see how passengers suffer, on that line. There is, however, a waiting-room to be seen on the G. I. P. Railway side of the station, but it is a fairly long distance from the spot from which the Barsi Light Railway makes its start. But even this waiting-room I was surprised to observe was monopolised by the officials and their subordinates and used as their offices or as a place of rest, although it is solely meant for the use of travellers.

I am well aware that in the first instance, I should have approached the Railway Board for redressing our grievance and not troubled this Council, but then the public have made representations to the Board but without success. Under these circumstances it is hoped that this Government will get the Railway Board to provide platforms and waiting-rooms and thus once for all end the trying inconvenience of thousands of pilgrims who visit Pandharpur all round the year. In any case at least the Barsi Railway side station at Kurduwadi must be so provided even although owing to war and financial difficulties the matter may be put off as regards the intermediate small railway stations, till normal conditions are restored.

I do not propose Your Excellency to take up any more time of this Council upon this simple but very important resolution.

With these few remarks, I have only to urge upon Your Excellency and the Members of this Council to pass this resolution and to recommend to the Railway Board the desirability of taking the necessary steps to comply with this crying want.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE:—Your Excellency,—I know a good deal about the conditions of the railway station at Kurduwadi. It is not called Kurduwadi Junction at present, but Kurduwadi. In the first place as regards the platforms on the Barsi Light Railway, owing to that being a 2 feet 6 inches gauge line the wheels of its coaching stock are small in diameter and therefore regular raised platforms are not necessary in the case of that line. In the second place, the great inconvenience that the Honourable MOVER of this resolution has brought to the notice of the Council has already attracted the notice of the Pilgrim Committee when they visited that station. The Pilgrim Committee have made certain recommendations on the subject which include amongst others that the whole joint station at Kurduwadi should be enlarged and larger waiting rooms and longer platforms should be provided for the convenience of the large numbers of pilgrims that come to this place. The matter, I believe, is receiving attention from the G. I. P. and the Barsi Light Railways. I do not think that much good will be served by pressing the points again upon the attention of the Railway Board. So if the Honourable MOVER agrees the resolution might be withdrawn.

The Honourable Sardar DULABAWA RAISINGJI, Thakor of Kerwada:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the resolution. The Honourable MOVER gives instances of the grievances against the Railway Company due to hardships which passengers are experiencing on that railway line. Honourable Members are aware of the inconveniences and hardships to which passengers, particularly third class passengers, in every railway line are put to and it is the duty of the railway companies to give every possible facility to the passengers. We often hear of the large profits made by the railway companies and I am sorry to say we have to notice that they have no regard for the poor people who have to expose themselves from want of proper accommodation of railway platforms and waiting-rooms.

With these observations I heartily support the resolution.

The Honourable Ráo Bahádur GANESH KRISHNA SATHE:—Your Excellency,—Coming from a district in which this Barsi Light Railway is working, I think, I should say a few words in support of this resolution. This Barsi Road is a station which is a junction both for Barsi Town and Pandharpur. It is about 19 or 20 years since this line was started and it is a matter of every day experience that a number of passengers have to suffer inconvenience on account of insufficiency of accommodation in the waiting-rooms and no account of the long distance from one platform to another. On several occasions I have visited this place and I find that when a passenger has to go from the platform of the G. I. P. to take the Barsi Light Railway train for Barsi Town or Pandharpur, he has to walk a long distance in the sun and under rain. It is absolutely necessary that the Barsi Light Railway Administration be induced to take up this work in hand and to have a small platform just opposite the line of the G. I. P. and that, I think, the mover of this resolution wishes to get.

STATIONS ON THE BARSI RAILWAY.

[Ráo Bahádur Ganesh Krishna Sathe; Mr. G. Carmichael; Sardar Shriniwas Coopooswami Mudliar; The Pesident.] [16TH MARCH 1917.]

As regards the waiting-rooms, I see that since 1898 their capacity is not appreciably increased though the number of passengers on account of the extension of the railway to Pandharpur has increased immensely.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL :—Is the Honourable Member talking of Barsi or Kurduwadi?

The Honourable Ráo Bahádur SATHE :—I am speaking about Barsi Road Junction, that is, Kurduwadi; because at Barsi there is a platform but at Barsi Raod Junction there is no platform.

I was just speaking about the insufficient accommodation of waiting-rooms and that does not apply to first and second class waiting-rooms alone but it applies more so in the case of third class waiting-rooms. If members of this Council remember that four times out of the year a large number of pilgrims visit Pandharpur viâ Barsi Road Junction, they will see the necessity of having better accommodation during the time they have to wait at the junction station The present state of things causes great inconvenience to passengers travelling on that line and I endorse every word of what has been said by the Honourable MOVER of the resolution, and I submit it will really be very kind of this Government to make a recommendation as suggested in this resolution to the Railway Board.

The Honourable Mr. G. CARMICHAEL :—I think that after what the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE has told us it is hardly necessary for Government to do anything more at present. The Honourable Dewan Bahadur was on the Pilgrim Committee and that Committee examined the various circumstances connected with the provision for passengers at Kurduwadi, more particularly, with regard to Pilgrim traffic and have submitted a recommendation for very extensive improvements at that station. The matter I understand will go to the Railway Board. But, I am prepared to give an assurance on behalf of the Bombay Government that if necessary they will press the matter on the attention of the Railway Board, I think the Honourable Member also referred to the provision of platforms at small stations on this Light Railway. With regard to this part of the resolution one has to remember that India requires these Light Railways, and if we impose on the promoters and companies too great a burden in the matter of these small facilities then I think we shall have a fewer number of Light Railways. The Honourable the Thakor of Kervada has suggested that all railways make large profits. That may be true, but unless the profit is considerable the necessary capital will not be forthcoming, and we shall have very much fewer railways than we should. The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE has pointed out that, as a matter of fact, platforms for these small side stations are hardly necessary. There are very few getting into the train at these places and the inconvenience of the distance from the platfrom is very small. Practically there is no inconvenience in the matter. I will assure the Honourable Mover of the resolution that Government will be prepared to submit if necessary a recommendation to the Railway Board. As I understand the matter and as pointed out by the Dewan Bahadur the Railway Board have already the proposals of the Pilgrim Committee before them. The Government of Bombay agree with those recommendations and they will make it their business to see that as far as practicable, they are carried out.

The Honourable Sardar SHRINIWAS COOPOOSWAMY MUDLIAR :—Your Excellency,—Have the recommendations of the Pilgrim Committee been carried out?

His Excellency the President :—I think the Honourable Member wants to know whether the recommendations of the Pilgrim Committee have been carried out. I am sorry I cannot give that information, but the real importance of the matter is realized by us. The Honourable Member probably knows that the Pilgrim Committee has recommended a very considerable improvement at the Kurduwadi Station. We will keep the matter before us and we will do everything we can to push the matter on and support the recommendations of the Pilgrim Committee. I think that is what the Honourable Member expects.

The Honourable Sardar MUDLIAR:—In that case, my Lord, I beg to move that this Government will recommend to the Railway Board the arrangements I have proposed.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—Would the Honourable Member repeat his statement, I cannot catch him.

The Honourable Sardar MUDLIAR:—I don't like to withdraw my resolution.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—Does the Honourable Member wish to press the resolution in the form in which it is, including small stations?

The Honourable Sardar MUDLIAR:—Yes.

The Honourable Ráo Bahádur SATHE:—If it is stated "waiting-rooms for passengers" and then drop all the wording "on the stations on the Barsi Light Railway and specially" and retain the words "at Barsi" will that resolution be accepted?

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—In that form on behalf of Government I am prepared to accept the resolution.

The resolution* as amended was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 10.

"That this Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council to consider the advisability of appointing, if or as soon as Financial conditions permit, a separate officer to push forward and popularize co-operative credit in Sind."

The Honourable Mr. BHURGRI.

The Honourable Mr. G. CARMICHAEL:—Your Excellency,—If I may be permitted to make a statement with regard to this resolution, perhaps the honourable member will not think it necessary to say much in support of it. The recommendations of the Committee on co-operation were sent to us for consideration by the Government of India. In dealing with these recommendations this Government came to the conclusion that in order that an advance in the matter of co-operation should be made in the Province of Sind, it was necessary that a separate officer should be appointed. The form in which the question has been considered is that the Registrar in Bombay should have control over Sind and the presidency proper, and that he should have under him two or more assistants, and that one of these assistants should work exclusively in Sind. This proposal complies with the recommendation which the honourable member proposes to ask this Council to accept. We have the matter under consideration and we have made a reference on the subject to the Government of India and we understand that these proposals have been forwarded to the Secretary of State, but owing to the war it has not been possible to take further action. But we have considered the advisability of appointing a separate officer to push forward and popularise co-operative credit in Sind.

The Honourable Mr. G. M. BHURGRI:—Do I understand that one of these officers will be a full-time officer for Sind specially?

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—I can assure the honourable member that if there is full-time work in Sind, then Sind will have a full-time officer.

The Honourable Mr. G. M. BHURGRI:—That will serve my purpose.

The resolution was then put to the vote and carried.

*This Council recommends that Government be pleased to move the Railway Board to provide railway platforms and waiting-rooms for passengers at Barsi.

SUB-ASSISTANT SURGEONS ON THE MEDICAL COUNCIL.

[The President; Mr. Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh.] [16TH MARCH 1917.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 11. The Honourable Mr. PAREKH.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH.—May it please your Excellency: The resolution that I wish to move runs as follows:—

"This Council resolves that His Excellency the Governor in Council may be requested to take early steps so to amend the Bombay Medical Act, 1912, as to render persons who have passed the Sub-Assistant Surgeons' examination, according to the Rules prescribed by Government, eligible to be Members of the Medical Council, and to bring the Bombay Enactment in this behalf into line with the corresponding Acts of other Provincial Governments under the Government of India."

Your Excellency, our Province was the first to take the lead in the matter of the passing of the Medical Acts, and under the Medicial Act of this province the presons who have passed the examination prescribed for Sub-Assistant Surgeons by the Government of Bombay are competent to be registered as medical practitioners. The qualifications for such registration are given in the Schedule which is annexed to the Act. The second part of the Schedule says:—

"Any person trained in a Government Medical College or School who holds a diploma or certificate granted by Government declaring him to be qualified to practise Medicine, Surgery and Midwifery, or to be qualified for the duties of a Military Assistant Surgeon, Hospital Assistant or Sub-Assistant Surgeon."

Now, the provision of section 2, clause (4), of the Act is the one against which I complain. In laying down the conditions which would qualify a man to be elected to the Medical Council, the clause says:—

"No person shall be eligible to be a member of the Medical Council unless he is—

"(a) a member of the Indian Medical Service, the Royal Army Medical Corps, the Army Medical Staff or the Royal Naval Medical Service and is for the time being serving in the Bombay Presidency, or

"(b) a medical practitioner for the time being registered under the Medical Acts and residing in the Bombay Presidency, or

(c) a graduate in Medicine or Surgery or a Licentiate in Medicine or a Licentiate in Medicine and Surgery of the University of Bombay for the time being registered under this Act.

So, the Council will see that a Sub-Assistant Surgeon, though he is qualified for being registered as a medical practitioner is not qualified for being elected for the Medical Council. After this Act was passed there were the Medical Acts of Madras, Bengal and Burma, and I have also been informed, though I have not been able to get access to the Act itself, that a similar Act has been passed for the Punjab.

Now, amongst the various Acts it will be found that the Madras Act allows the Sub-Assistant Surgeons to be elected to the Medical Council and for that purpose I refer your Excellency to section 5 of the Madras Act, clauses (d), and (e) and section 6. They read as follows:—

5. (1) A Medical Council shall be established for the Presidency of Madras and shall consist of fifteen members including a president and a vice-president to be appointed in the following manner:—

(a) the president nominated by the Governor in Council;

(b) one member elected by the medical faculty of the Senate of the University of Madras;

(c) one member elected by the registered practitioners who are registered under the British Medical Act;

(d) three members elected by the registered practitioners who are graduates in medicine of the University of Madras;

(e) two members elected by all other registered practitioners;

So, in Madras the Sub-Assistant Surgeons who are entitled to be registered as medical practitioners are also entitled to be elected as members of the Medical Council.

Section 6 of the Madras Act says :—

6. No person shall be eligible to be a member of the Council unless he is a registered practitioner.

So, under the Madras Act the Sub-Assistant Surgeon is not disqualified for being placed upon the Medical Council.

Similar provision appears also in the Bengal Act VI of 1914. I refer the Council to section 4. It reads :—

4. The said Council shall consist of fifteen members, namely :—

(a) a president to be nominated by the Local Government;

(b) seven members to be nominated by the Local Government;

(c) a member to be elected, from among the members of the Faculty of Medicine, by the Senate of the University of Calcutta;

(d) one member to be elected by registered practitioners who are qualified to be registered under the Medical Acts;

(e) three members to be elected by registered practitioners who are graduates or licentiates in Medicine or Surgery of the University of Calcutta; and

(f) two members to be elected by all other registered practitioners:

So, under the Bengal Act your Lordship will find that the Sub-Assistant Surgeons are also qualified to be put upon the Medical Council.

Then in the Burma Act I of 1915 section 3 runs as follows :—

"3. A Medical Council shall be established for the Province of Burma and shall consist of nine members who shall be registered practitioners for the time being resident in Burma and shall be appointed in the manner following:—

"(a) a president and three other members to be nominated by the Local Government.

"(b) three members to be elected by such registered practitioners, for the time being resident in Burma, as are registered under the Medical Acts; and

"(c) two members to be elected by such registered practitioners, for the time being resident in Burma, as are not registered under the Medical Acts."

So the Council will see that in all the Indian Acts except that of Bombay the Sub-Assistant Surgeons are qualified to be put upon the Medical Council. When the Bombay Act was passed, there was nothing to indicate the attitude that the various legislative bodies in India would take in this connection. Now we know how the various legislative bodies have in the other parts of India disposed of this question, and I think it would be necessary and desirable that the same recognition should be given to the Sub-Assistant Surgeons of Bombay as is being given to similar officers elsewhere. I submit that no man would say that the examination which the Bombay Sub-Assistant Surgeons have to pass is in any way inferior to the examinations of similar officers elsewhere, nor can it be said that there is any other reason why the Bombay Sub-Assistant Surgeons should hold a position inferior to that of similar officers elsewhere. I should think it would reflect a slur upon the Bombay service if these people are not given the same privileges in this Presidency which they would have received if they were serving as Sub-Assistant Surgeons elsewhere, and I would therefore ask that this resolution be accepted.

SUB-ASSISTANT SURGEONS ON THE MEDICAL COUNCIL: INVESTIGATION OF HYDRO-ELECTRIC SCHEMES AND KARNATIC COLLEGE.

[Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; Mr. G. S. Curtis; the President; Dewan Bahadur Kashinath Ramchandra Godbole; Mr. Abdul Kadir alias Fakir Mahomed walad Ibahim Khan Pathan.] [16TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL.—Your Excellency,—I rise to support this resolution in a few words. It seems to me that the issue involved is very simple. The position is this, that the sub-assistant surgeons in this presidency are entitled to return two members to the Medical Council; that is to say, they are voters, but they are not eligible for being elected. Now I submit, Sir, when the Act has recognized them as voters Government should go a step further and recognise them as persons who could be elected also. I am quite sure and my honourable friend the Surgeon-General, who is here, will also agree with me that there are several gentlemen among sub-assistant surgeons who are as competent as some of the civil surgeons themselves. I know personally of several instances which I can cite. Dr. Jethalal, who was till recently posted at Surat and the well-known Dr. Benjamin of Ahmedabad are instances in point. I do not for a moment believe, My Lord, that the class of sub-assistant surgeons as a whole could not find two capable men from among themselves to represent them on the Medical Council. I, therefore, have very great pleasure in supporting the resolution.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS.—May it please Your Excellency,—Perhaps it will shorten discussion if I say that Government are prepared to accept the suggestion. As to the number of seats to be assigned to the body, Government can give no guarantee, but as regards the principle, they are prepared to accept it.

The resolution was put to the vote and carried, subject to the Honourable Mr. Curtis' observations.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 12—the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE.

"This Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council will be pleased to place on special duty at the earliest convenient date a capable officer of the Public Works Department to report upon the development of waterpower in this Presidency, both for direct use and for the establishment of hydro-electric plants, the special duty officer being instructed to give approximate costs of the proposed waterpower schemes, the details being left to be worked out by promoters proposing to utilize the power for industrial purposes."

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE:—Your Excellency,—As regards this resolution, I had a discussion with the Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL and we have come to an understanding that we should have an informal discussion about it before the resolution proceeds further. Under these circumstances, Sir, I would ask the indulgence of postponing the consideration of this resolution to the next meeting of the Council.

Resolution by leave postponed to the next meeting of this Council.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Resolution No. 13, the Honourable Mr. PATHAN.

The Honourable Mr. ABDUL KADIR alias FAKIR MAHOMED walad IBAHIM KHAN PATHAN:—My Lord, the resolution that I have the honour to move reads as follows:—

"This Council recommends that the Government be pleased to issue a Press Note on the subject of the Karnatak College, giving the public a clear assurance that the Government will, as soon as the financial conditions permit, raise the Second Grade Arts College to be established at Dharwar by the beginning of June next to the status of a First Grade College."

My Lord, Government have undertaken to start a first grade college at Dharwar if the people contribute two lakhs of rupees. This fact is borne out by the statement made in the "Remarks" column of the provincial budget against the provision made in it for the Dharwar Karnatak College. In that statement Government have given an undertaking to start a first grade college at Dharwar if the people give a contribution of two lakhs, and Government further say in the statement that on account of the financial stringency they are not in a position to start a first grade college, and that therefore they have decided to start at present a second grade college. In view of the statement made in the budget, I do not think I need say much in support of the resolution. It is only the wording in the press note issued by Government that has given a suspicious sort of feeling to the people and the people do not know whether Government are going to start a first grade college or not. I only wish that Government should be pleased to assure me that as soon as the financial stringency is over they will redeem their promise. I do not say that Government should start the first grade college now, but I do wish that Government will be pleased to say as much as they have said in the remarks they have made in the remarks column of the budget. With these few words I submit this resolution for the acceptance of the Council.

The Honourable Mr. MAHADEV BHASKAR CHAUBAL :—Your Excellency,—I do not think this resolution need detain the Council at any length and I might inform the Honourable Member and the Council that Government have already instructed the Director of Public Instruction to inform the University, if the University wanted an assurance on the subject, that Government have the fullest intention of applying for the affiliation of the College as a 1st grade college when financial conditions improve and Government is in a position to equip and furnish the college as a first grade college. The Director of Public Instruction has as I have said been already instructed to give that assurance to the University and so far as the Honourable Member and the public is concerned, I am prepared to give that assurance here. But, of course, it is very difficult for this Government to bind any subsequent Government by any limitation of time. So far as this Government can state their position, therefore, they have the fullest intention, when financial conditions permit, of developing this college into a first grade college, and if my honourable friend will see his way to amend his resolution in the way in which I propose, Government will readily accept it. I propose that the resolution should read as follows :—

This Council recommends that the Government be pleased to give the public an assurance that Government will as soon as financial conditions improve, apply for the affiliation of the second Grade Arts College, to be established at Dharwar, in the further courses in which instruction is imparted at a First Grade College.

I do not think it is necessary to issue a press note. A press note can only give the assurance which I am giving now on behalf of Government because the Honourable Member will see that it is not for the Government to say, but for the University, whether the affiliation to any particular grade should be granted or not according the circumstances which are set forth in the application before them. But at present our financial conditions will only permit us to apply to the University for starting a second grade college. Instead of the wording "raise the second grade arts college" I propose the words that "Government will apply for the affiliation of the college in the further courses in which instruction is imparted at a first grade college." If that will satisfy the Honourable Member, Government is prepared to accept the resolution.

KARNATIC COLLEGE: INQUIRY INTO PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

[Mr. Abdul Kadir alias Fakir Mahomed walad Ibrahim Khan Pathan; the President; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel; Mr. Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh.] [16TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. PATHAN :—I am quite agreeable to that amendment.

The resolution as amended was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—Resolution No. 14.

That this Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council may be pleased to direct an enquiry by a Committee or otherwise on the question of the public expenditure of this Presidency with a view to secure economy whenever possible.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL :—Your Excellency, with regard to this resolution I want Your Excellency's ruling. I am entitled to make my speech.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—As far as I remember both the Honourable Member and the Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE have made their speeches at the last meeting. I now call upon the Honourable Mr. PAREKH to make his speech.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH :—Your Excellency,—In supporting this resolution I say that the public, this Council, and the Government should feel thankful to my honourable friend Mr. PATEL for bringing this important question for discussion. In connection with the Resolution under discussion I propose in the first instance, to direct the Council's attention to the points that I wish to bring out. These are, firstly, the rate at which the expenditure of our province has been progressing. The second point is that Government during the last 11 years have been enabled to meet this increased expenditure not merely by the normal increase of revenue but by the circumstance that some divisible heads of revenue have been entirely provincialised and that some provincial shares and their divisible heads of revenue have been considerably increased. The third point that I wish to bring out is that the expansiveness of some of the heads of revenue has been considerably diminished, if not entirely lost; and it is not safe to rely much on the apparent expansiveness of the Abkari Revenue. Then I also propose to show that an increase of expenditure in some Departments and particularly in the Departments of Education and Sanitation and also in that of Land Revenue is needed for the purpose of very urgent reforms and an increase in revenue according to the scale at which it rose during the last 10 or 11 years would be necessary in order to carry them out. I think it would not at all be desirable to allow these reforms to stand still, and I propose to show that the reforms that are necessary could not be carried out unless there are curtailments under some other heads of revenue. In establishing my conclusions on these points I will try to be as concise as possible. In connection with the first point it is necessary that I should institute some sort of comparison between the different years, and in making this comparison I think it would not at all be right to include the last two years 1915-16 and 1916-17, because they were years of an exceedingly abnormal character in consequence of the retrenchment which was forced upon the Provincial Government owing to the great war. Therefore, I propose to take the 11 years from 1904-05 to 1914-15 for the purpose of showing at what rate the provincial expenditure has advanced. I select the year 1904-05 as it was the last year of a periodical settlement with the Imperial Government. Under the head of Land Revenue the expenditure in 1904-05 was 67 and it rose to 90 lakhs in 1914-15. So under this head the increase of expenditure came to 23 lakhs. Under the head of Registration, a small head no doubt, the expenditure in 1904-1905 was nearly 3 lakhs, in 1914-15 it had risen to nearly 4 lakhs. So, under this head there was an increase of 1 lakh in expenditure. Under the head of Excise the expenditure in 1904-05 was about 5 lakhs and it rose to 12 lakhs in 1914-15 and thus there was an increase under this head of 7 lakhs. Under the head of Forest the expenditure in 1904-05 was 19 lakhs and it rose in 1914-15 to 26 lakhs and thus there was an increase of 7 lakhs under it. Under the head of General Administration the expenditure in 1904-05 was 15 lakhs and in 1914-15 it rose to 19 lakhs which means an increase of 4 lakhs.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL :—May I ask with regard to General Administration to what particular item of expenditure does the Honourable Member object?

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH :—So far as general expenditure is concerned it would not at all be proper in this discussion to say in reference to any expenditure that it was proper or improper. These are questions which I should consider are not at all necessary to discuss on this occasion. The line I propose to take is to show to the Council that the amount of increase has been very considerable.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL :—Does the Honourable Member mean to say that we should sit on the money and not spend it and do nothing with it?

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH :—Not at all. Under the circumstances I do not at all mean that Government should not spend it. What I propose to show is that so far as the revenues are concerned unless curtailments are made in certain directions we would be in an exceedingly wrong position. I do not mean to say that there should be sitting upon the money; what I propose to show is that the money that will be available to you will be small and therefore curtailment in certain directions and particularly in the matter of establishments or agency for the purpose of carrying on the various administrative departments would be necessary. That is the thing which I want to show. I do not mean to say that any particular item of revenue is wrong or that there is fault in any particular matter, but what I want to show generally is that as things stand the expenditure in certain directions is of a very growing character and the demands of the people under certain heads are of a very urgent character and therefore, it would be necessary to make curtailments in certain directions with the view that the needs of the people and the public needs of the Presidency may be met. I therefore, do not at all propose to show whether economy can be practised or ought to be practised because that would be left to the enquiry which is the object of this resolution.

Therefore it would be rather premature for me to now tell you that I wish the curtailment of any particular expenditure. That should be the function of the enquiry of the Committee which is proposed, where curtailment may be made and where not.

Under the head of Law and Justice the expenditure in 1904-05 was Rs. 48,00,000 and in 1914-15 it had risen to Rs. 57,00,000 which gives an increase of Rs. 9,00,000. Under the other sub-head of this head, namely the Administration of Jails, the expenditure was Rs. 8,00,000 in 1904-05 and it rose to Rs. 12,00,000 in 1914-15. There was thus an increase of Rs. 4,00,000 under this sub-head. Under the head of Police the expenditure in 1904-05 was Rs. 64,00,000 and it rose to Rs. 1,07,00,000 in 1914-15, thus giving an increase of Rs. 43,00,000. Under the head of Ports and Pilotage the expenditure in 1904-05 was Rs. 67,000 and in 1914-15 it had risen to Rs. 2,88,000. So under this head there was an increase of Rs. 2,11,000. Under the head of Education the expenditure in 1904-05 was Rs. 23,00,000 and in 1914-15 it rose to Rs. 1,03,00,000. Under the head of Medical the expenditure in 1904-05 was Rs. 23,00,000 and in 1914-15 it rose to Rs. 49,00,000, an increase of Rs. 26,00,000. There is an increase in the expenditure of Rs. 1,00,000 during this period under the head Political. Under the head Scientific and other Departments, the expenditure in 1904-05 was Rs. 3,00,000, and in 1914-15 it rose to Rs. 14,00,000.

INQUIRY INTO PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

[Mr. Desai; the President; Mr Harchandrai Vishindas; Mr. Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh; Mr. Lallubhai Samaldas Mehta; Mr. Upasani.] [16TH MARCH 1917.]

The Honourable Mr. DESAI :—Would it be convenient for Your Excellency either to postpone this resolution to the July meeting of the Council or postpone it till to-morrow.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—I am entirely in the hands of the Honourable Member who is speaking at the moment.

The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS :—I propose, under rule 7 an adjournment of the consideration of this resolution to the next meeting of the Council.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—The best way will be for the Honourable member to conclude his speech.

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH :—I would much prefer to let it be adjourned today and I should proceed further tomorrow, but I leave it entirely in your Lordship's hands. If your Lordship thinks that I ought not to detain the Council any further today, the Council may adjourn, but I should prefer to continue my address tomorrow.

The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS :—I formally propose that the consideration of this resolution be adjourned to the next meeting of the Council in July.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—The motion that the Honourable Member makes is that the discussion of this resolution be adjourned till the July meeting.

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH :—So far as the motion before the Council is concerned of adjourning it to July I object to it. The matter was adjourned at the last meeting, and now I think it is not a question which ought to remain adjourned much longer.

The Honourable Mr. LALLUBHAI SAMALDAS MEHTA :—I support the motion for adjournment.

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI :—Considering that we have already delayed considering the question so long, I think a two or three months' further delay will not be much.

Further consideration of the resolution was postponed to the July sessions.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—The Council will now adjourn.

The Council then adjourned sine die.

J. NISSIM,

Questions.	Answers.
(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state whether such an appointment is so reserved in each district in Sind? Questions.

Answers.

From these figures it will be clear that in the highest stage (the collegiate) so far from a reduction having taken place, there has been an increase. The decline in Middle and High Schools is appreciable, but not very considerable, and may be surmised to have been due to the abnormal conditions that have prevailed during these years. If, however, under the term "reduction" the Honourable Member refers to the relative disparity between the number of Mahomedan students in the upper stages and that of boys of other communities, the low percentage may be regarded as due to the want of appreciation of education on the part of parents and the reluctance of a large number of Mahomedan youths to attempt the highest examinations. Poverty is one of the reasons, but it is not peculiar to the Mahomedan community. In certain parts of the Presidency, the Mahomedans are drawn rather towards trade and industries than to higher education, and hence they prefer to pass direct from school to business. In Sind, the Mahomedan population is mainly agricultural, and the reasons why there are comparatively few Mahomedans in Secondary Schools are poverty, apathy and the relative lack of facilities, which is inevitable in rural areas.

The Commissioner was further directed to frame a scheme for the administration of the charities mentioned in the Will of the deceased, which had not yet been carried out, and to name fit and proper persons as trustees of the said charities.

Prior to the suit a Mozaffarkhana for Mahomedan pilgrims was erected at Paltan Road, Bombay, and has since been largely used. The cost amounted to Rs. 3,36,432, and a sum of Rs. 50,000 has been set aside for its maintenance. The preparation of the scheme has been delayed owing to the residue not having been determined, there being claims of the Estate of both the father and mother of the deceased against the Estate of the deceased.

The claim of the estate of the father has now been settled. The claim of the estate of the mother relates to the immoveable property referred to at the end of answer (a).

The Advocate General has agreed to the Executor giving out of the residue Rs. 5,00,000 to the Bombay Municipality for the construction and upkeep of Maternity Hospitals in Bombay and Rs. 62,000 for the erection of a Cottage Ward in the Lady Hardinge Medical College for Women at Delhi.

(b) If the rules applicable to Municipal and Local Board Schools do not apply to schools situated in Cantonments, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for the difference ?

(b) The grants, however, made to primary schools maintained by Local Boards and Municipalities are not governed by this Code, but regulated by special orders issued from time to time since 1903. The reason for the distinction is that in 1903 Government found that the financial resources of Municipalities and District Local Boards, which are bound under the law to make adequate provision for primary education within their respective areas, had been crippled by famine and plague and that further development and extension of primary education could not be carried out unless the resources of those bodies were supplemented by grants from provincial revenues at a rate higher than that admissible under the Code.

Observance of holidays in Mofussil Civil Court.

21. Will Government be pleased to state whether all the Gazetted holidays are observed in practice by the Mofussil Civil Courts ?

21. By Gazetted holidays it is presumed that the Honourable Member means holidays notified by Government to be public holidays under section 25, Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881).

The holidays to be observed by Civil Courts are laid down in section 43 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869) and in Chapter XVII of the Manual of Circulars issued by His Majesty's High Court of Judicature, Bombay.

The two sets of holidays are not the same in all particulars.

1. (i) Has the attention of Government been directed to the persistent demand of the inhabitants of Purnagad and the adjoining villages in the Ratnagiri District to have Purnagad made a port of call by the B. S. N. Company's steamers?

Opening of a new port of call for steamers in the Ratnagiri District.

1. (i) Government received a petition on the subject on 15th December 1916.

(ii) Is it a fact that the port offers good facilities for anchorage and that the people concerned have offered to guarantee the Company an average of 50 passengers per day during the fair season and to bear the expense of erecting the necessary waiting sheds, etc.?

(ii) The question of opening Purnagad as a port of call has been discussed for some years. An anchorage and landing place which are stated to be safe have been pointed. It has been stated that a daily average of 50 passengers can be guaranteed during the fair season. The Company, however, experiences much difficulty in maintaining its present services owing to the number of its steamers required for military and naval requirements, and Government do not think it advisable to place fresh obligations upon it at the present time. The Commissioner has been asked to report on the subject when more normal times return.

(6) Is it a fact that the procedure that used to be followed in the time of the previous Chairman has been departed from on the present occasion? If so, for what reasons?

(6) Yes. The number of objections received was very large, and it was thought that it would suit the convenience of all concerned if they were considered at the combined office of the Committees at Palli Hill, Bandra, in the morning. Many of the house-owners visit Bombay daily and can attend at the Head Office on their way. Orders have since been issued that such objections should, in future, be dealt with, as far as possible, at local centres and at different times so as to suit the convenience of the public.

(7) Were any communications addressed to the Chairman by individual rate-payers against the procedure adopted by him and has he acknowledged or replied to any of them?

(b) Will Government be pleased to say why this information is not included in the annual administration reports of the Director of Public Instruction?

This question was asked at the meeting held on the 13th March 1917, when an ad interim reply was given.]

(b) The information is not included in the annual reports of the Director of Public Instruction, because it does not appear to be of such special importance or of such general interest as to warrant its regular inclusion in those reports. Moreover, the inclusion would necessitate the creation of an additional special table of a bulky character in the Director of Public Instruction's annual reports and would not only entail much additional labour and sacrifice of time, which might be more profitably employed in other directions, but would also tend to increase their bulk unnecessarily. It may be added that the information can always be collected if required for any particular purpose.

Attachment of certain property in Parantij Taluka by Talukdari Settlement Officer.

2. (a) Is it true that the Mamlatdar of Parantij, under orders of the Talukdari Settlement Officer, attached the property of Bai Rukhmani and Bai Suraj of Moyad Vasrupji under Parantij Taluka for recovery of certain alleged arrears on 20th March 1911.

2. (a) Yes.

(b) Is it true that the said two ladies filed suits against the Mamlatdar and others in the District Court of Ahmedabad on the 19th March 1912, and is it true that by order, dated 6th April 1912, the Talukdari Settlement Officer released the property under attachment?

(b) The two ladies did file suits, but they were dismissed by the Joint Judge and the attachments declared legal. The Talukdari Settlement Officer released the property as the year was a famine one.

3. (a) By the consent decree of 1897 the Thakore agreed to provide his wife with apartments or to pay Rs. 2,000 (not Rs. 3,000) in lieu thereof, and this amount was paid. (b) Is it true that when after the death of the said Thakore the said Thakrani asked the Talukdari Settlement Officer for payment of the amount, the said officer refused to pay the amount?

(b) The Talukdari Settlement Officer did not refuse to pay the amount.

(c) Is it true that when, on this refusal, the said Thakrani filed a suit against the Talukdari Settlement Officer for the amount, and when the suit was proceeded with, the Talukdari Settlement Officer entered into a consent decree with the Thakrani for the amount?

(c) The Thakrani did file a suit but not in connection with the sum of Rs. 2,000 awarded in the consent decree. The suit was filed to regain possession of the apartments which the Thakore in his lifetime had taken over from the Thakrani. She thereupon filed a suit in connection therewith, which was subsequently settled for Rs. 3,000.

Jivai lands of the late Thakore Umedsinhji of Motiboru.

4. (a) Is it true that the Thakore Umedsinhji of Motiboru in his lifetime made a will that after his death his widow should enjoy his Jivai lands?

4. (a) The Thakore's will referred to his whole property (57 dokdas' share in two villages) and not to any Jivai lands in particular.

(b) Is it true that the Talukdari Settlement Officer approved and sanctioned the will?

(b) Yes.

(c) Is it true that, on the death of the said Umedsinhji, the Talukdari Settlement Officer attached and took under management the said Jivai lands referred to in the will?

(c) No. The whole property was already under the management of the Talukdari Settlement Officer under a mortgage deed for a debt of Rs. 20,000 due to the Jubilee Institute. Leases had been given to the Thakore and after his death to his widow, but this system was stopped in 1912-13 and departmental management was resorted to. This is presumably what is meant by "attachment" but it did not take place for three years after the Thakore's death.

(d) Is it true that the widow filed a suit against the Talukdari Settlement Officer for recovery of the lands and that, after the filing of the suit the Talukdari Settlement Officer released the lands from his management?

(d) The widow filed a suit for injunction to prevent the Talukdari Settlement Officer taking over her Gharkhed lands when departmental management was introduced. 6. Will Government be pleased to inquire if the farms of the following estates have been given by the Talukdari Settlement Officer after due publication of notifications and by public auction?

Certain farms in certain talukas under the Talukdari Settlement Officer.

(1) Aghar under Viramgam taluka,

(2) Kunvar and Chal under Sanand taluka,

(3) Rojka under Dhandhuka taluka.

Is it true that in the case of each farm the Talukdar protested to the Talukdari Settlement Officer that the farm was being given at low amounts and expressed his readiness to pay a larger amount for the farm?

[These questions were asked at the meeting held on the 13th March 1917, when ad interim replies were given.]

6. (1) The lease of the Aghar estate was sanctioned by Government so far back as the year 1906. No notification was published nor was any public auction held as the Talukdari Settlement Officer adopts the procedure best suited to each case. The talukdars had first agreed to the lease but afterwards offered the same amount themselves which was refused as they were considered incompetent to manage the estate. They then filed a suit which was dismissed and the Court approved the lease.

(2) The Kunvar estate is not leased but is under the management of the Talukdari Settlement Officer, as representing a minor, jointly with the other two owners of the village. The lease of Charal (not Chal) which is owned by an Inamdar, and not a talukdar, was publicly auctioned, the last bid being Rs. 2,325. It was subsequently leased privately for five years for Rs. 2,500. The Inamdar has never protested or offered a larger amount.

(3) The village of Rojka comprises many estates and it is not known to which estate the reference is made. The Talukdari Settlement Officer knows of no such case.

28. What is the procedure for selection of (a) English and (b) vernacular text-books?

Selection of text-books.

28. As regards English text-books, the examination of which pertains to the Provincial Text-Book Committee, the usual procedure is that either (1) the Director of Public Instruction receives a book, which seems likely to be useful in schools, from the publishers direct and sends it to one or more of the Educational Inspectors, who form the standing sub-committee of the Provincial Text-Book Committee, or (2) the book is sent up to the Director by the manager of a school, through the Divisional Educational Inspector, for sanction as a school book. In either case the book is then seen by the Director of Public Instruction and if it deals with a technical subject, it is sent to the sub-committee dealing with such subjects. If, however, it is a simple reader or a book with no special difficulties in it, the Director, himself decides whether it is fit to be circulated for opinion among the members of the Provincial Text-Book Committee or whether it should be summarily rejected as unsuitable for school purposes.

In the case of vernacular text books the Director of Public Instruction, on receipt of a book, sends it to the Vice-Principal of the Divisional Vernacular Training College for a preliminary report. If the report is favourable the book is referred to one or more members of the Divisional Vernacular Text-Book Committee. When the opinions of the members consulted are received, they are submitted by the Educational Inspector of the Division, to the Director of Public Instruction, who after considering all the reports finally decides whether or not the book should be recommended to Government for sanction.

Finally it may be added that the power to sanction the use of a book whether in English or in a vernacular as a text-book in an educational institution rests with Government.

29. The text-books referred to were not, and did not require to be, sent to the Text-Book Committee for approval, as they were specially prepared at the instance of the Educational Department by experts in the different branches of the subject under the general editorship of Mr. Wren. List of assistant masters and Assistant Deputy Educational Inspectors.

34. Is it a fact that for the purpose of giving promotion one common list for the whole Presidency is kept in the case of assistant masters in secondary schools, and in the case of Assistant Deputy Educational Inspectors a separate list for each division is kept? If so, will Government be pleased to state why different lists are kept for officers of one and the same rank?

Answers.

33. The Poona Camp Government English School has two sides—Gujarati and Urdu, and has so far been administered mostly by Gujarati-knowing Head Masters. To develop the Urdu side, it was considered necessary and desirable to place the school in charge of a Urdu-knowing Head Master when the late Head Master retired in March last. The present occupant of the post was found to be the best qualified and most suitable Urdu-knowing graduate and hence was specially selected. There has thus been no supersession as such. If, however, the Hon'ble Member desires to know merely the number of Urdu-knowing persons of longer service than the present occupant of the post (irrespective of their qualifications and suitability for the post), it is approximately 18.

34. One common list for the whole Presidency is not kept for all assistant masters in secondary and training institutions. Separate lists are kept for special teachers, such as language teachers, drawing teachers and gymnasts. In the case of ordinary assistants two separate lists are kept—one for Sind and the other for the Presidency proper. As regards Assistant Deputy Educational Inspectors, separate lists for districts grouped according to their vernacular are kept in the Presidency proper, a special list being kept for Sind as in the case of assistant masters. Lists according to language divisions in the Presidency proper are kept, with a view that the various grades of pay may be fairly distributed among officers of the different language divisions, and men of senior grades may become available for the posts of Deputy Educational Execution of Partition Decrees.

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what steps they propose to take to expedite this work?	(b) The reports called for from the Commissioners of Divisions show that (i) except in very few cases no undue delay in the execution of partition decrees has been noticed, (ii) in cases of minor delays intricate and troublesome
[This question was asked at the meeting held on the 4th December 1916 when ad interim reply was given.] operations were involved, (iii) there is not much opportunity for curtailing the time required to carry out partitions, and (iv) such measures as are possible to expedite the execution of decrees are being adopted. Delay cannot always be avoided without the entertainment of a special staff at the expense of the litigants.

2. Will Government be pleased to state:—

Impounding of cattle by Forest Officers in Belgaum Division.

(a) The amount credited to Government in 1914-15 and 1915-16 on account of cattle pound fees and charges in respect of cattle sent by the Forest Officers in the Belgaum Division to several cattle pounds in that Division?

(a) As cattle caught in the forest are sent to cattle pounds to which other cattle are also sent for impounding, it would not be possible without great labour to ascertain what portion of the cattle pound fees and charges were on account of cattle impounded in the Forests of the Belgaum Division. Moreover, cattle impounded in that Division were not necessarily sent to cattle pounds in the Belgaum District. The number of cattle impounded by Forest Officers in the Belgaum Division were:—

5,202 in 1915-16.

(b) The amount collected in the same years by the Forest Officers in that Division as penalty or compensation in respect of trespass by cattle, independently of the fees and charges that the owners had to pay to the cattle pounds?

(b) The amount of compensation recovered by the Forest Department in the Belgaum Division as penalty or compensation for cattle trespass in forest was:—

Rs. 4,459-8-0 in 1914-15
Rs. 4,456-13-0 in 1915-16.

This includes compensation paid for damage to forest by cattle which were too wild to be captured or which were trespassing at a great distance from a cattle pound. It does not include cases in which the owner of the cattle was prosecuted. The major portion of the compensation was paid as penalty for grazing in closed areas.

(c) * * * * *

(d) If it is a fact that the Forest guards or officers who catch hold of trespassing animals and put them into cattle pounds are given rewards by the Forest Department and, if so, whether there are any rules sanctioned by Government in that behalf?

(d) Rewards are given for the detection of forest offences of this kind under sections 310 and 311 of the Standing Orders of the Forest Department.

(b) The number of Urdu Schools in this district and the number of pupils attending them—boys and girls separately?	Vide* Appendices N and O.

(d) The number of pupils, the Deputy Inspector and his Assistants are each expected to examine or inspect in a year?	(d) 3,000 and 5,000 respectively, but occasionally these figures are exceeded.
(e) If it is a fact that the Dharwar District has been divided into several beats, each beat being assigned to an Educational Inspecting Officer?	(e) Yes.
(f) If so, whether the one Mahomedan Assistant Deputy Inspector attached to the district is required not only to examine or inspect schools (Kanarese and Urdu) within his beat but also to examine or inspect schools scattered over the district and beyond his beat?	(f) The Urdu Assistant Deputy Inspector inspects all the Urdu Schools in the district, but the inspection of these schools only being somewhat insufficient for a whole year's work, some Kanarese primary schools are also assigned to him for inspection. In view of the travelling involved in the inspection of all the Urdu schools scattered over the district, his share of inspection work is kept comparatively smaller than that of other Assistant Deputies.
4. (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the posts of the special Mahomedan Deputy Educational Inspectors for Urdu Schools, S. D. and C. D., are on the cadre of the District Deputy Educational Inspectors?	4. (a) The answer to this part of the question is in the negative.
Mahomedan Deputy Educational Inspectors, S. D. and C. D.
(b) If not, whether Government proposes to place these posts on that cadre?	(b) The question will be considered shortly.

Questions.

(b) Is it not a fact that in these districts the Fund was collected by Police Sub-Inspectors in each taluka?

Answers.

(b) No subscriptions for the Fund were collected by the Police Sub-Inspectors in the East Khandesh District. In the West Khandesh District most of the money was collected by Police Sub-Inspectors, who were furnished with an appeal written in Marathi by the Superintendent of Police, which was to be shown to all persons approached. Information regarding the difference between the old and the revised assessments will be continued in the Selections from the Records of Government relating to these settlements, which will, as usual, be published.

(b) Was the difference between the new and the old assessments remitted in those cases as required by section 104 of the Land Revenue Code in the case of lands to which the revised settlements referred?

(b) Government have directed that effect should be given in the year of introduction of the new settlement to all reductions in assessment determined by the revised rates, and that in those cases in which the excess of the old assessment over the revised assessment has been collected in the year of introduction, the amount recovered in excess should be deducted from the assessments due in the following year.

(d) Is it a fact that out of 152 villages in the taluka 131 were re-settled in 1897-98 and the assessment fixed in that settlement for those villages was meant to be for a term of 30 years and was the term fixed till 1914-15 only to allow a regrouping in respect of the remaining villages of which the old settlement was to expire in the latter year?

19. Will Government be pleased to state how many places are kept vacant in the Judicial, Revenue and Police Departments for want of School Final candidates in the several Districts in the Central Division.

Answers.

18. (a) The Honourable Member is referred to the reply to clauses (d) to (g) of Question No. 25 asked by the Honourable Mr. P. A. Desai at this meeting of the Council.

(b) Such petitions are considered by Government before orders are passed; but it is not usual to communicate the final orders specially to the petitioners.

(c) Yes: it was not then the practice to publish the settlement officer's proposals before they were reviewed by the officers concerned and by Government. Government have since ruled that in the notification for local publication in the villages, the Settlement Officer should also publish a brief summary of the reasons for the proposed alterations in the rates and grouping and that a copy of the Settlement Officer's report should be deposited in the taluka office in order that persons interested therein may consider the detailed proposals.

20. The Honourable Member is referred to Government Notification No. 6307, dated 24th June 1916, printed at pages 1372—1373 of Part I of the Bombay Government Gazette of 29th idem which gives the rules for the appointment of talatis.

The Honourable Member's attention is drawn to the fact that Government Order No. 10676, dated 8th November 1916, refers to new appointments of officiators in kulkarni watans, made in the case (i) of representative watandar kulkarnis serving in person after 1st January 1918 and (ii) in the case of deputies after 1st January 1917.

Supplementary question to question No. 20.

The Hon'ble Mr. UPASANI:—How many of the Talatis engaged by Government have passed the double test now required of the Vatandar Kulkarnis? The answer given to the question is not what I wanted.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Does the Hon'ble Member say that the answer is not what he expected? He must accept the answer that is on the paper.

21. How many of the officiating Vatandar Kulkarnis in the several Districts draw less than Rs. 75 and how many less than Rs. 150 a year and how many above the latter amount?

22. The information will be called for.

23. (a) With reference to the answer given to question No. 14 asked by me at the last Council meeting will Government be pleased to place on Recovery of assessment in the village of Ropla.

23. The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to his question at the last Council meeting in which it was stated that the newspaper's allegations on which his question was based were substan-

the Table the Mamlatdar's report on the inquiry he made into the complaints referred to in the question and the written statements taken by him ?	tially incorrect. The matter was enquired into in the village concerned by the Acting Collector personally, and Government do not think it necessary to make further enquiry into a matter which occurred more than a year ago, nor to lay the papers concerning it on the table.
(b) Is it true that the village was affected by plague and the ryots living outside at the time the first instalment fell due ?	It is not the case that both instalments of the current year were demanded at the time of the first instalment. Any fines that were inflicted were imposed by the Mamlatdar on account of instalments not being paid at the proper time. One money order was refused by the Kulkarni, not by the Patel, by mistake; but the money order was not sent till after the date of the first instalment, and the fine inflicted was on account of the first instalment not being paid at the proper time.
(c) From how many of the villagers were both instalments recovered together before the second instalment fell due ?
(d) Did the village patil insist on payment of both instalments and were Narayen Anant Kulkarni and Baboorao Appaji Teli and Rambhaji Yemaji Jadhav made to pay fines at one and two annas a rupee on amounts of both the instalments though they paid it before the second instalment fell due ?
(e) Had Narayen Anant Kulkarni remitted his amount by money order on the 29th March 1916, and did the patel refuse to accept the payment and return the money order, and did he get fine levied from him on that very amount ?
24. Is there any foundation for the complaints made by a correspondent in the "Khandesh Vaibhava" newspaper of the 25th June 1917 with regard to the thefts committed at the Jalgaon Railway station by the Railway's own hamals ? — Thefts at Jalgaon railway station.	24. Enquiry is being made.
25. Will Government be pleased to lay on the table the petition dated the 14th April 1917, with a postscript dated the 16th idem, submitted by one Vishnu Vinayak Vaze of Dhamori, taluka Kopergaon in the Nagar District, to the Executive Engineer for Irrigation, Pravara Canal, and the several applications, referred to in that petition, which he had made to the Subordinate Officers in charge of the canal and the orders which may have been passed with reference to the complaints contained in those applications and the petition to the Executive Engineer ? — Petition of Vishnu Vinayak.	25. Government must decline to place the papers on the table.

Questions.

26. Is it true that certain lands required for a causeway over the Palaspa Nalla in the Panvel Taluka for acquisition of which notification was published only in the Government Gazette of the 15th March 1917 were taken from the owner's possession in December 1915 or January 1916 without payment of any compensation and was he made to pay the assessment for them for 1915-16 and 1916-17 though they were taken from his possession?

Land acquired in Panvel Taluka.

27. Will Government be pleased to state the number of buildings for quarters for Police officers and of lines for policemen put up in the several Districts in the Presidency since the Police reorganization scheme was introduced and the total expenditure incurred on them respectively?

Provision of police quarters.

For how many officers and men respectively has provision been made with the expenditure?

28. Has an estimate been made for a pakka bridge on the Taptee on the Agra Road between Nardana and Shirpur in West Khandesh, and if so, what does the estimate amount to?

Pakka bridge over the Taptee.

29. Will Government be pleased to state whether the recent circular orders issued by Government prohibiting students from attending public meetings are meant to apply to only political meetings or to non-political meetings also.

Students and Public meetings.

Answers.

26. Information will be called for.

27. The police reorganization scheme was not introduced all at once, but various parts of it were introduced in the period 1905—1913. It is therefore not possible to supply the information desired.

The following figures show the position as ascertained in 1913 regarding the provision of quarters for the police:—

Sub-Inspectors.	Sergeants.	Jamadars.	Head constables.	Constables.	Remarks.
286	8	11	2,988	14,855	Provided.
466	23	17	1,493	6,617	Not provided.

28. An estimate for a causeway (not a bridge) across the Tapti on the Bombay-Agra Road in the West Khandesh District has been sanctioned for Rs. 1,78,937.

29. The circular refers only to political meetings. In this connection the attention of the Hon'ble Member is invited to the reply given to question No. 6 put by the Hon'ble Mr. Manmohandas Ramji.

APPENDIX B.

BOMBAY BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

(Incorporated in England by Special Act of Parliament.)

Agent's Office:
Bombay, 2nd April 1917.

No. 5274-T.

From

To

The Under Secretary to Government,
Public Works Department, Bombay.

Subject.—Overbridge at Palej.

Dear Sir,

With reference to your letter No. 372, dated 26th March 1917, I beg to report for the information of Government that a man named Bijai Ramesvar, whilst attempting to cross the line at the level-crossing, south of Palej Station, was knocked down by a shunting engine resulting in serious injuries to his head from the effects of which he died on the way to Broach, where he was being removed for medical treatment. The accident occurred at 4 A. M. on 3rd January 1916, and the police reported on the case as follows:—

> "It was dark at the time and the driver could not therefore see the deceased. The Third Class Magistrate, Broach, held an inquest and returned a verdict of accidental death. No one to blame but the deceased himself."

2. As regards the second portion of the question asked by the Honourable Member, this Company has decided to provide a foot overbridge at Palej and the item has been entered in the list of urgent works to be undertaken as soon as funds are available. I would add that funds had, as a matter of fact, been allotted for this work, in our budget for 1916-1917, but as the overbridge cannot be erected without infringing standard dimensions, a reference had to be made to the Senior Government Inspector of Railways, Circle No. 5, who has in turn, I understand, referred the matter to the Railway Board. Nothing further can therefore be done until the decision of the Railway Board is received.

Yours faithfully,

(Sd.) R. WOOLLCOMBE,
Agent.

APPENDIX F.

No. 1508 of 1917-18.

The Schools Committee's Office,
Municipal Office, Fort,
Bombay, 2nd June 1917.

From—The Secretary, Schools Committee;

To—The Director of Public Instruction, Poona.

Subject.—Requisition for some information about the number of school-going-age-children.

Sir,

With reference to your letter No. 2446, dated 1st instant, I have the honour to state as follows :—

(A) We have no definite data to say what the number of primary-school-going-age-children in Bombay may be. Taking from 6 complete to 11 complete as the primary-school-going-age, I estimate 80 to 90 thousand as the number in question.

The number in schools at the end of 1916-17 was as follows :—

Municipal schools	23,987
Aided schools	15,623
Unaided and unrecognized schools (estimated) ...	4,648
Total ...	44,258

(B) So far as the records in this office and the memories of the old hands go—(I myself joined this office only in February 1915)—no regular census of school-going-age-children was taken officially by the Joint Schools Committee or the Schools Committee. It appears, however, that the late Hon'ble Mr. N. N. Wadia, a merchant and mill-owner, the then Chairman of the Joint Schools Committee, got enquiries made, mainly through the instrumentality of men of his own private office, in the year 1895 as to the total number of children in Bombay and those in schools. The results are given in the Joint Schools Committee's report for 1895-96. The figures showed that the total number of children from 5 to 12 was then 1,11,352 out of whom 33,295 were in school.

I am sorry I could not reply earlier to the Deputy Educational Inspector's letter on the subject.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
D. G. PADHYE,
Secretary, Schools Committee.

Tuberculosis.

Open-air Schools.

Measures taken by the Educational Department in connection with the campaign against tuberculosis.

No. 2939.

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT.

Bombay Castle, 13th October 1913.

Letter from the Director of Public Instruction, No. 12884, dated the 6th February 1913:—

"With reference to paragraph 3 of Government Resolution, General Department, No. 7097, dated the 23rd October 1912, I have the honour to report as follows.

"2. The Government of India suggest the giving of definite instruction in schools in the larger towns on the dangers of tuberculosis. We have already distributed freely among all schools, not only in towns but also in the country, copies of the two pamphlets prepared by, or in consultation with, the Surgeon General. Government have directed the lessons on this subject and on malaria to be included in the new Sanitary Primer; but so far it has not been found possible to get such a primer written. In place of it I have accepted a Marathi manuscript written by Mr. R. M. Joshi, B.A., and approved by the Vernacular Text-book Committee. This manuscript has now to be printed and sanctioned by Government, after which it is proposed to get it translated into the other vernaculars. To avoid encroaching on any primer which may hereafter be brought out by Government, Mr. Joshi has not actually reproduced the lesson on consumption approved by Government, but he has given the substance of it in his book which is brief and simple and likely for the present to serve all the purposes of the old Sanitary Primer in vernacular and Anglo-vernacular schools. Further, in the new course of Science recently sanctioned by Government for Anglo-vernacular schools lessons on hygiene are included, and the new readers will no doubt refer to the subjects of tuberculosis and malaria. If Mr. Wren writes them he will probably follow the lines of a Health Reader which he has written for Messrs. Macmillan, and which I see includes lessons on malaria, plague, inoculation, consumption, cholera, small-pox and vaccination. (This book is one of nearly 200 pages and is therefore rather too long to superimpose on boys' other work in place of the old primer.) It will be seen therefore that we shall shortly be able to give effect to the wishes of the Government of India even more widely than they suggest. But in addition to the study of these lessons in school it may be suggested that medical men, official or non-official, who may be competent and willing to do so, should be invited to give special lessons to parents, teachers and the elder pupils, illustrated, if possible, by the magic lantern or at least by diagrams and pictures. Similar lessons should be given in training colleges, and if inspecting officers are provided, as I have proposed in another connection, with magic lanterns and slides, they too should be encouraged to give lectures on the subject whilst on tour.

"3. The Government of India next suggest the establishment of special classes for tuberculous children. As it would scarcely be feasible to have special classes in the same building, it would be necessary to establish a kind of central school to which tuberculous children could be brought from various parts of the town. Municipalities are already sufficiently perplexed by the problem of providing ordinary sites and buildings for their schools. The provision of a special school of the kind indicated would probably be very expensive: probably also means of conveyance would have to be provided for some of the children. I fancy that at any rate for some time to come many parents would rather withdraw their children from school altogether than have them segregated, in the manner suggested, and so the expensive provision made would not be much used. But supposing the provision to be made, the tuberculous children must then be picked out. I have to report to Government in another connection on the subject of medical inspection of school-children, but I may say here that after seeing the Surgeon General on the subject I think that we are still a long way from the time when a general medical supervision of children will be feasible (unless of course Government are prepared to entertain a large special staff for the purpose). The onus of bringing suspicious cases to notice is therefore likely to be thrown for the present on the teacher; and it will be necessary to bring the teachers together from time to time to receive instruction from some specially competent person in the symptoms of certain diseases. Mr. Fraser has already suggested that this should be done in Bombay for the benefit of his students under training and other teachers in Anglo-vernacular schools.

"4. The Government of India then suggest the establishment of open-air schools for children who are not tuberculous but are likely to become so. The first question here is, how are such children to be identified? The Surgeon General tells me that the diagnosis of incipient tubercle is a most difficult and delicate task, requiring very special skill and training. If any child who seems in poor condition is to be included, we shall have to provide probably for one-half of those attending town schools. Then the same difficulties as already suggested in the case of the special classes are likely to arise, and I need scarcely stop to point out that the provision of 'open air' anything is one of the most difficult problems of large towns. Mr. Lory is of opinion, and I think that he really goes to the root of the matter, that more could be done for the prevention of tuberculosis by the utilisation of the money on the erection of suitable school buildings in all towns. 'The schools are often seriously overcrowded and in themselves constitute what is probably the most prolific means for the propagation of tuberculosis. The readiest means to combat tuberculosis is to secure healthy buildings for all schools with adequate ventilation and light. The Department does what it can to require the municipalities to provide suitable buildings, but their difficulties are great and the number of children is continually increasing. I am strongly of opinion that special free grants should be made to the municipalities to enable them to provide suitable school buildings.'

"5. In towns the expensiveness of sites and buildings, and in the country the expensiveness of the conventional buildings have long been the great obstacles to progress in this matter. It seems to me that something more might be made of the 'open air' idea for all children and not merely tuberculous ones. I have often noticed in Ceylon school buildings (secondary as well as primary) consisting of a dwarf wall, a set of pillars and a roof. Here there is abundance of both light and ventilation, and the cost of erection must be comparatively small. It is possible that such a style of building would not suit the climatic conditions of Sind and some other parts of this Presidency; but Ceylon is hot and Ceylon is often very wet, and if such school-houses are feasible there, I do not see why they should not be equally feasible in at least some of our districts. The objection has been raised that the school furniture and equipment would be exposed to injury and loss. I am afraid that this question never occurred to me in Ceylon; but from childhood I have heard that while every prospect pleases in that island, 'Man alone is vile,' from which I infer that the same difficulty must occasionally have arisen there and that means have been found to surmount it."

Government memorandum to the Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay, No. 844, dated the 27th March 1913:—

"Forwarded to the Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay for favour of any remarks he may have to offer.

"2. In particular the Surgeon General is requested to favour Government with his opinion on the suggestion regarding the giving of special instruction to parents, teachers, etc., made by the Director of Public Instruction at the end of paragraph 2 of his letter."

Government letter to the Colonial Secretary to the Government of Ceylon, No. 845, dated the 27th March 1913:—

"I am directed to state that the question has been raised in this Presidency of the construction of open-air schools of a simple and inexpensive type.

"2. The Governor in Council understands that in parts of Ceylon schools of this type, consisting only of a dwarf wall, a set of pillars and a roof, are in common use. It is possible that such schoolhouses would prove suitable in some of the districts of this Presidency, but a difficulty arises as to the preservation in such conditions of the school furniture and equipment from exposure to weather and loss by theft. I am to request that you will be good enough to state whether any difficulty is experienced on this score in Ceylon, and, if so, what means have been found to surmount it. I am also to request that any papers showing how the system of open-air schools works in Ceylon may be furnished to the Government of Bombay.".

Letter from the Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay, No. B.—5205, dated the 19th April 1913:—

"With reference to your No. 844, dated 27th March 1913, forwarding a copy of letter No. 12884 of 1913, from the Director of Public Instruction and asking for remarks thereon, I have the honour to state that the general instruction of the public including parents of children and teachers of schools in the prevention of tuberculosis is one of the main objects of the King George V Anti-Tuberculosis League. So far no branches of this League have been formed outside Bombay itself, where the preliminary work is now being carried on. I would recommend the formation of a branch of the League in every district and every large town. It seems to me that through its agency the necessary knowledge could be most rapidly and effectively spread.

"2. In my letter No. B.—4866, dated 11th April 1913, to the Director of Public Instruction, I have suggested the entertainment of three medical inspectors for the existing high schools. If this recommendation is accepted, these officers also might well be utilized as travelling lecturers to parents, teachers and children at each place they have to visit in carrying out their duties of the inspection of children.

"3. While recognizing the value of such instruction, I entirely agree with the views of the Director of Public Instruction and Mr. Lory as expressed in paragraph 4 of the Director of Public Instruction's letter. I think very much needs to be done towards improving and altering the usual school building. In my opinion little more is required for a school in this country than a really good impervious floor, raised on a plinth and which can be easily washed down each evening; a surrounding wall with numerous openings and not reaching to within more than three feet of the roof, and a good substantial roof.

Even in Sind such a building is, I believe, all that is required. In the hot weather the school hours should be in the early morning only. It is useless instructing parents and teachers in preventive measures so long as the schools themselves are overcrowded, ill-ventilated and insanitary.

"4. I believe the great majority of schools are without the most ordinary sanitary conveniences and that the children not infrequently have to resort to the road outside, or the compound, for purposes of nature. Every school should be properly provided in these respects. I visited the new high school in the course of construction at Jalgaon a short time ago. So far as I could ascertain, the plan of this school had not been submitted to any sanitary authority before it was approved of. I found that no sanitary annexes of any sort had been provided, and was told that probably iron latrines would be put up in the compound. I consider that the plans of every new school and hostel should be submitted to some sanitary expert for an opinion before building is commenced, and that no school should be permitted to be opened in any building until it has been certified by some sanitary authority to be fit for that purpose."

Letter from the Colonial Secretary to the Government of Ceylon, No. 6135, dated the 15th April 1913:—

"With reference to your letter No. 845 of the 27th March 1913, I am directed to forward herewith a copy of a report by the Director of Public Instruction of this Colony relative to the construction of open-air schools."

Letter from the Director of Public Instruction, Ceylon, to the Colonial Secretary to the Government of Ceylon, No. 56, dated the 8th April 1913:—

"In the low country of Ceylon and in the lower parts of the hill districts schools are regularly held in buildings with dwarf walls and a roof supported by pillars. Such buildings are very suitable on sanitary grounds and are also economical. They give rise to two difficulties: (1) storage of furniture, (2) insufficient protection against bad weather.

"2. Storage of furniture is provided for by constructing at one end of the building a small room which can be locked up and into which all the smaller articles of furniture can be removed after school hours. Heavy articles, such as benches and desks, are very rarely stolen.

"3. If the length of the building runs from east to west, it is very little troubled with sun in this latitude. But there are many places in which the wind is a serious difficulty, and a large number of the buildings of this type are provided with tats which can be let down if necessary.

"4. It may be added that many of the schools in fine weather are to a considerable extent actually open-air schools. In many cases quite half the children are taken out for the greater part of school hours to work under trees in the school compound. This is a great relief in the larger schools of two or three hundred children, of which there are many in the low country.

"5. I cannot refer to any papers dealing specially with this question. But it may be safely said that all those who have much to do with school work in Ceylon are agreed that the building with dwarf walls is much the most suitable for school purposes. Even a building of this type may become too hot if it is roofed with corrugated iron or the flat tiles imported from Calicut and Mangalore; but if it is thatched with straw or cadjan, or roofed with the locally made round tiles, it provides the most favourable conditions possible for teaching. Difficulties will naturally occur in latitudes where there is anything like a severe winter. But there must be many parts of India where the winter difficulty would be sufficiently obviated by beginning school at a rather late hour in the day."

RESOLUTION.—The measures suggested by the Government of India, in connection with the campaign against the spread of tuberculosis, with which the Educational Department is concerned, are:—

(a) the giving of definite instruction in schools in the larger towns on the dangers of tuberculosis;

(b) the establishment of special classes for tuberculous children who should be segregated from their fellows; and

(c) the establishment of open-air schools for children who are not tuberculous but who are in poor condition and likely to become tuberculous.

2. With reference to recommendation (a) it may be observed that the lessons on tuberculosis, malaria, and microbes and the pamphlet containing a description of simple precautionary measures to be taken against tuberculosis, which were prepared by the Surgeon General and approved in Government Resolutions No. 572, dated the 23rd March 1910, Educational Department, and No. 1332, dated the 27th February 1912, General Department, have been distributed free among all schools both in urban and in rural areas, and that a text-book on sanitation which contains the substance of the lesson on consumption approved by Government has been prescribed for use in Anglo-vernacular and primary schools. Lessons on hygiene are included in the new science curriculum for secondary schools recently sanctioned by Government, and the new science readers which are under preparation will no doubt refer to the subjects of tuberculosis and malaria. The Governor in Council concurs therefore with the Director of Public Instruction in thinking that effective action is already being taken in the direction of this recommendation by the Government of India.

3. The Director proposes however that, in addition to the measures already adopted, lectures illustrated by the magic lantern, or, failing that, by diagrams and pictures, should be delivered to parents, teachers and the elder pupils by those local medical men, official or non-official, who may be able and willing to do so, and by inspecting officers whilst on tour. With regard to this proposal the Surgeon General remarks that the instruction of the public, including the parents of school children and school masters, in the prevention of tuberculosis is one of the main objects of the King George V Anti-Tuberculosis League, and recommends the formation of a branch of the League in every district and in every large town. Steps, it appears, have already been taken by the League with this object in view. Government approve the further proposal of the Surgeon General that the services of the medical officers who will be employed in connection with the scheme for the medical inspection of pupils in secondary schools and training institutions should be utilized for the purpose of giving medical instruction by means of lantern lectures and charts to school teachers and children at the places which they visit in the execution of their duties. As regards primary schools steps are being taken to supply each Deputy Educational Inspector with magic lanterns and slides for exhibition in such schools with a view, among other objects, to the propagation of sanitary knowledge in rural areas.

4. With regard to the other two recommendations of the Government of India the Governor in Council, while recognizing the practical difficulties pointed out by the Director of Public Instruction in the way of adopting the proposal to maintain two classes of special schools—one designed for tuberculous children and the other for children who are in danger of becoming tubercu'ous—is willing nevertheless to afford special assistance to any municipality, which may desire to undertake the experiment of establishing schools of either class, by paying three quarters of the cost of the buildings and the same proportion of the cost of maintenance of the schools. The plans of the school buildings in such cases will have to be specially approved by the sanitary authorities, and the building grant will be subject to the condition that half of it will be liable to be refunded to Government in the event of the building ceasing, without sufficient cause, to be used for the special educational purpose for which it was designed and being appropriated to ordinary educational purposes. At the same time it is practically certain that only in rather exceptional conditions and in comparatively rare instances will it be possible to establish such special schools as those contemplated, and the Governor in Council therefore endorses the view expressed by Mr. Lory that the provision of spacious, well ventilated and hygienic school-houses generally should be regarded as the most efficacious measure for the prevention of the spread of tuberculosis among children. In accordance with this view the Director of Public Instruction has already been informed in Government Resolution* No. 2149, dated the 25th July 1913, that Government desire that municipalities should participate with local boards in the allotment of Rs. 12½ lakhs made by the Government of India for the erection and equipment of elementary schools, which, it has been decided, is to be devoted to the payment of free building and equipment grants.

5. With reference to the suggestion made at the end of paragraph 3 of the Director of Public Instruction's letter that arrangements should be made for imparting instruction to teachers in the symptoms of certain diseases, it may be observed that provision has already been made † for delivering a course of lectures on the common diseases of children before teachers in Bombay and Poona.

* Vide Press Note No. 2150, dated the 25th July 1913.

† Vide Government Resolutions, Educational Department, No. 1015, dated the 9th April, and No. 1816, dated the 25th June 1913.

Government will be glad to consider proposals for extending the experiment to other centres such as Sholapur and Ahmedabad if, in the light of the experience gained, the Director of Public Instruction and the Surgeon General are of opinion that such extension is desirable and practicable.

6. As regards the question, referred to in paragraph 5 of the letter of the Director of Public Instruction, of the adoption of a simpler type of school building for rural areas, which will combine cheapness with the advantages of "open air" location, copies of the papers received from the Colonial Secretary to the Government of Ceylon with his letter No. 6135, dated the 15th April 1913, regarding the construction of open-air schools in that colony and extract paragraph 3 of the Surgeon General's letter No. B.-5205, dated the 19th idem, should be forwarded to the Director. Undue value should not, of course, be attributed to experience acquired in the different climatic and social conditions of Ceylon, but in view of the immense multiplication of elementary schools which is taking place, and will continue to take place, throughout the rural areas of the Presidency and of the very great cost involved in the general provision of buildings of the ordinary substantial type hitherto regarded as necessary for such schools, Government consider it extremely important that the suitability to local conditions of a type of school building which presents such manifest advantages as does that adopted in Ceylon should be submitted to careful and thorough investigation. It might perhaps be possible, they think, to construct buildings of this simple type in such a way as to render them easily convertible subsequently into school-houses of a more complete and substantial pattern. In any case it can hardly be doubted that, in certain conditions and especially in rural areas, schools of this type, even if not ideally suitable, would represent a distinct advance on the noisy, crowded, ill-ventilated and badly lighted rented houses which at present frequently do duty as school-houses. The Director should therefore be requested to arrange, after due consultation with the district officers and the officers of the Public Works Department, to institute in a few selected localities as diverse in character as possible the experiment of a simple type of open-air school. The progress of the experiment and its ascertained results should be specially noticed in his annual report.

7. As regards paragraph 4 of the Surgeon General's letter, Government have already issued orders to the effect that in future the plans for Government and aided educational institutions should invariably be examined by the Sanitary Engineer and the Sanitary Commissioner from the sanitary and hygienic point of view (vide concluding portion of paragraph 4 of Government Resolution No. 1467, dated the 21st May 1913).

Indian Sanitary Policy.

No. 138.

GENERAL DEPARTMENT.

Bombay Castle, 7th January 1915.

Resolution* of the Government of India, Department. of Education (Sanitary), Nos. 888—908, dated the 23rd May 1914—

Reviewing the Indian Sanitary Policy.

RESOLUTION.—Copies of the Resolution of the Government of India, which has already been republished in the Bombay Government Gazette, should be forwarded for information to the Sanitary Commissioner for the Government of Bombay, the Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay, the Sanitary Engineer to Government, the Sanitary Board, the Commissioner in Sind, the Commissioners of Divisions, the Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay and all Collectors, including the Collectors in Sind and the Deputy Commissioner, Upper Sind Frontier. The Collectors should be requested to communicate copies to the municipalities in their respective districts. Copies should also be forwarded to the Departments concerned for information.

2. With regard to paragraph 6 of the Government of India's Resolution, several municipalities in this Presidency have appointed Medical Officers of Health and Sanitary Inspectors, and Government have sanctioned grants-in-aid towards the cost of their entertainment in accordance with the scheme laid down in Government Resolution No. 4090, dated the 28th May 1913. The Sanitary Commissioner for the Government of Bombay has recently submitted proposals for the regrouping of municipalities for the classification of Health Officers and Sanitary Inspectors and for the improvement of their pay and prospects. These proposals, which have been generally approved by the Sanitary Board, are under the consideration of Government.

3. In paragraph 9 of their Resolution, the Government of India allude to the appointment of Provincial Sanitary Boards composed of officers representing the medical, sanitary, engineering and other departments with the addition of non-officials to them. They also view with favour and confidence the devolution of financial authority to these boards, and, with the view of securing increased efficiency, they commend the appointment of a permanent salaried secretary to the board. The Sanitary Board for this Presidency has recently been reconstituted as shown in the margin. The Board has been authorized (1) to sanction projects costing up to Rs. 20,000, and (2) make non-recurring grants up to Rs. 10,000 in each case. The latter authority was hitherto subject to the restriction that the grant should in no case exceed half the cost of the work, the grantee providing the other half. This condition has since been removed as it was represented to Government that it deterred the less affluent municipalities, which might be unable to provide half the cost of the work, from utilizing the Government grant (vide Government Resolution No. 4266, dated the 29th May 1914). The Sanitary Board should be requested to favour Government with their opinion on the question of appointing a permanent salaried secretary to the Board.

4. In paragraph 24 of their Resolution the Government of India have expressed their desire that every facility should be afforded to any one wishing to obtain protection against plague through inoculation for himself or his family, and they commend to local Governments the employment of carefully selected private practitioners to this end. Since the year 1910, twenty-four assistant surgeons have been engaged every year for inoculation work, twelve throughout the year, and twelve as required from time to time. Besides this, a grant of Rs. 1,000 is placed annually at the disposal of the Surgeon General to meet expenditure in connection with anti-plague inoculation at the different hospitals (vide Government Resolution No. 2481, dated the 18th April 1912). The Surgeon General should, however, be asked to suggest what further measures, in his opinion, might with advantage be adopted in order to give effect to the recommendations of the Government of India, especially in the direction of the utilization of the services of private medical practitioners for inoculation work.

5. In paragraph 27 of their Resolution the Government of India offer certain suggestions for coping with tuberculosis. The question of the establishment of tuberculosis dispensaries and separate wards for tuberculous patients is under consideration.

6. With regard to the question of the registration of vital statistics dealt with in paragraphs 29 and 30 of the Government of India's Resolution, this Government in their Resolution No. 7097, dated the 23rd October 1912, invited the opinions of the Commissioners on Major Robertson's scheme for the employment by municipalities of medical men of the grade of sub-assistant surgeon as registering officers. The opinions received were referred to the Surgeon General and the Sanitary Commissioner, who considered Ahmedabad to be a suitable place for a trial of a scheme of this nature. The former officer has accordingly discussed the question of the registration of vital statistics at Ahmedabad with the Civil Surgeon and the Medical Officer of Health of the Ahmedabad Municipality, and the last named has formulated a scheme according to which a head registration office would be established under his control with a staff consisting of one registrar and three clerks. The scheme further contemplates the organization of twelve sub-registration offices, each office staffed by one clerk and one literate peon. This scheme, however, aims only at numerical accuracy, whereas Major Robertson's proposals were intended to improve the quality of registration by the imposition of an effective check over the diagnosis of the causes of death. The Commissioner, Northern Division, was accordingly informed that, provided that the Municipality adopted some such scheme as that outlined above which would ensure the reporting of all deaths, Government would be prepared to undertake the cost, as an experiment, of the further measures necessary to secure a higher standard of accuracy in regard to the registration of the causes of deaths. These measures were to consist of the employment of six sub-assistant surgeons, each on a salary of Rs. 50 + Rs. 10 per mensem, for a period of three years. The Commissioner was requested to address the Committee of Management of the Ahmedabad Municipality on the subject with a view to inviting their co-operation. The Municipality have now accepted their Health Officer's scheme, but do not propose to put it into actual operation until the imposition of terminal taxation provides the additional funds required for the purpose. The arrangements for the introduction of the new tax are still under discussion. Government have in the meanwhile sanctioned the appointment of the proposed sub-assistant surgeons with effect from the date of their engagement in accordance with the scheme.

7. In paragraph 31 the Government of India invite special attention to the importance of sanitary surveys on broad lines, and have expressed a desire that systematic working plans should be drawn up, where this has not already been done, with a view to mapping out the sanitary conditions of all the more important towns and localities in which sickness or mortality is above normal. The subject had already engaged the attention of this Government, and a statistical enquiry with a view to dividing the Presidency into areas seriously, less seriously and slightly affected with malaria has been carried out by the Deputy Sanitary Commissioners (Government Resolution No. 4796, dated the 29th September 1910).

The outcome of this general survey was the institution of malarial surveys in Karachi by Dr. Mhaskar and in Kharaghoda by a party under Dr. Khambatta. This party is now engaged in a malarial survey of the Kanara district, while a similar survey, undertaken in Sind by another party, has been only temporarily suspended. Salsette also has been completely surveyed by Major Marjoribanks. Apart from these malarial operations, Government have under consideration proposals for the appointment of District Health Officers, a scheme, which, if carried out, will have for effect the relief of Deputy Sanitary Commissioners of much of their routine work and will give them more time for undertaking systematic sanitary surveys of the urban areas in their charges.

8. The Collectors should be requested to invite the attention of the municipalities concerned to the recommendations contained in clauses (b) and (c) of paragraph 36 of the Government of India's Resolution.

9. In paragraph 39 of their Resolution the Government of India invite attention to the importance of providing adequate facilities for the isolation of cases of epidemic diseases, and suggest the desirability of having in every important municipality a small well-built segregation hospital in charge of a qualified medical practitioner. This suggestion should be communicated by the Collectors to the more important municipalities in their charges, and the latter should be informed that Government are prepared to consider favourably, wherever local circumstances appear to justify such a course, applications for the grant of financial assistance for the construction of segregation hospitals.

10. The question of the contamination of the milk supply referred to in paragraph 42 of the Resolution of the Government of India is engaging the attention of Government.

11. The Surgeon General should be requested to favour Government with his remarks on the suggestion made by the Government of India in paragraph 46 (a) of their Resolution for giving special training in hygiene to sub-assistant surgeons.

12. With regard to the suggestion of the Government of India for the adoption of organized measures for the diffusion of an elementary knowledge of the more common infectious diseases, it may be observed that provision has already been made* for delivering a course of lectures on the common diseases of children before teachers in Bombay and Poona. The Director of Public Instruction and the Surgeon General were asked to submit proposals for extending the experiment to other centres, such as Sholapur and Ahmedabad, if, in the light of the experience gained, they were of opinion that such extension was desirable and practicable. Such proposals have been recently received, but in view of the financial situation created by the war, Government have postponed their consideration for the present. In the meanwhile, however, having regard to the importance of undertaking without delay the preparation of the requisite charts and diagrams to illustrate the lectures in question, a sum of Rs. 300 has been placed at the disposal of Major Liston, Director of the Bombay Bacteriological Laboratory, for starting work in this direction as an experimental measure (vide Government Order, Educational Department, No. 4051, dated the 16th December 1914). Government have also approved† the proposal of the Surgeon General that the services of the medical officers who will be employed in connexion with the scheme for the medical inspection of pupils in secondary schools and training institutions should be utilized for the purpose of giving medical instruction by means of lantern lectures and charts to the teachers and children at the institutions which they visit.

Nos. 888—908, dated Simla, the 23rd May, 1914.

RESOLUTION.

Indian Sanitary Policy.

Historical summary.

The modern history of scientific sanitation in India may be said to date from the end of the last century. Previously there had indeed been periods of useful spade work and spasms of general sanitary activity. A Royal Commission, appointed in 1859 and reporting in 1863, recommended the formation of commissions of public health in the presidencies of Madras, Bombay and Bengal, with a view to the diminution of sickness in the army, and the improvement of the health of the general population. These commissions were appointed, but were soon replaced in each presidency by a sanitary commissioner with an assistant. Sanitary inspectors general, afterwards called sanitary commissioners, were appointed in other provinces; and the sanitary and vaccination staffs were gradually amalgamated. In 1888 Lord Dufferin's Government issued a resolution drawing the attention of local bodies and village unions to their duties in the matter of sanitation; and sanitary boards were formed in every province. But comparatively little success attended these efforts except in the larger towns. On the one side, sanitary measures and systems of western countries were applied to India without due regard to the fundamental differences of western and eastern civilisations and of the conditions of life in tropical and temperate climates: on the other side, the people were unprepared for reform or any kind of change.

2. The ravages and horrors of plague and the discoveries resulting from medical research made some real impression on the educated community in India; and a demand gradually arose for sanitary surroundings and preventive measures, such as had not been known before. Individuals left their insanitary quarters for cleaner and healthier localities and in increasing numbers men began to realise the dangers to which they were exposed from existing conditions; and to appreciate the economic value of health and the wastefulness of sickness and premature death. Dislike of action was, however, for long persistent even among the educated. So far as the uneducated masses were concerned, their apathy, fatalism and resentment of interference constituted a formidable obstacle to all sanitary progress.

3. The governments in India have moved more rapidly of late. In 1898, the Government of India issued an important statement of policy. In 1908, imperial grants amounting to Rs. 30,00,000 (£200,000) a year were made to local Governments. A new department of the Government of India was created in 1910 in order to relieve the Home Department of education, sanitation and some other branches of the administration. In addition to sanitary conferences held by local Governments, three all-India sanitary conferences have been convened at Bombay, Madras and Lucknow, respectively, over which the Hon'ble Sir Harcourt Butler presided as Member of the Governor-General's Council in charge of the department concerned. These conferences were attended by non-officials as well as officials, by laymen as well as professional sanitarians. Again, the Indian Research Fund Association has been founded to further the prosecution of research, and the propagation of knowledge and experimental measures generally in connection with the causation, mode of spread and prevention of communicable diseases. To this fund the Government of India make an annually recurring grant of 5 lakhs of rupees (£33,333). Moreover, since the constitution of the new department of the Government of India, imperial grants have been made to local Governments and Administrations to the amount of Rs. 4,61,47,000 (£3,076,466), of which Rs. 55,23,000 (£368,200) are recurring, and Rs. 4,06,24,000 (£2,708,266), non-recurring. In addition, grants amounting to Rs. 82·33 lakhs (£548,866) a year have been made to district boards in certain provinces, a substantial portion of which will, it is hoped, be expended on rural sanitation. These grants have rendered practicable the execution of schemes which a few years ago seemed beyond the limits of financial possibility; and there can be little doubt that the movement for sanitary reform is now well established and progressive throughout the country.

Recent activity.

4. There has thus been progress although the rate has hitherto been slow. In the land of the ox-cart one must not expect the pace of the motor car. The truly remarkable improvements effected of late years in the health of the army in India, in the case of Indian no less than British troops,* cannot be expected in connection with the civil population. In the case of the army, the problem is concerned mainly with well nourished adults, all of whom are selected lives, living in sanitary surroundings, under military discipline. Moreover, so soon as a soldier becomes unfit for active service, he leaves the army and forms part of the civil population. In the case of the civil population, the conditions of the problem are very different, and sanitary reform has still to grope its way through a labyrinth of difficulties. In order to be successful it must conform to three cardinal principles :—

Cardinal principles.

(1) it must rest on a knowledge of the people, their conditions of life, their prejudices, social customs and habits, their surroundings and financial means; and it must secure their co-operation ;

(2) it must recognize the diversity of local conditions in a country which includes numerous communities, castes and creeds and which exhibits almost every variety of climate, temperature, humidity and level of sub-soil water, from the deltas of Bengal with their steamy atmosphere and dense lush vegetation to the burnt brown hills of the north-west frontier;

(3) its introduction must be preceded by preliminary local surveys, inquiry, or experiment.

5. As a result of the Plague Commission's Report Lord Curzon's Government took up with vigour the re-organisation of the sanitary department Research institutes were started and an appointment of Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India was created. The functions of this officer were to advise the Government of India upon sanitary and bacteriological questions, to settle with local Governments the principles on which an advance should be made and to organise and direct research throughout India. The arrangement was not completely successful. Among the disadvantages the separation of research from clinical work deterred men from entering the department, and the office work in connection with research prevented the Sanitary Commissioner from undertaking wide and constant touring The organisation was accordingly modified in 1912. The Sanitary Commissioner is now the independent adviser to the Government of India in all technical and sanitary matters, but all questions of personnel as well as the administration of the bacteriological department and research generally have been placed under the control of the Director-General, Indian Medical Service, with the Sanitary Commissioner as his staff officer.

6. The sanctioned strength of the superior sanitary organisation in India now is:—

(a) Appointments of health officer in presidency towns and Simla are not included

(b) Five of these are temporary appointments.

(c) In addition to the officers shown in this statement, the Director, Vaccine Institute, Belgaum, is also a sanitary officer.

(d) There is also a temporary appointment.

(e) Temporary.

(f) One of these is temporary.

(g) The administrative head of the medical department is also the Sanitary Commissioner.

(h) There are also four 3rd class health officers in the province.

(i) The Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India is also Sanitary Commissioner, Delhi.

(j) Two of these are temporary.

In their resolution, dated the 23rd May 1912, the Government of India provided for a large increase in the number of deputy sanitary commissioners and for the appointment of health officers (of the first class for larger municipalities and of the second class for the smaller towns) on the lines of detailed proposals received from local Governments. Twelve additional appointments of deputy sanitary commissioner, thirty-five appointments of health officer of the first class and a large addition to the number of second class health officers were sanctioned in 1912 and 1913, the entire cost of the additional deputy sanitary commissioners on the basis of the scale of pay fixed for Indians and half the cost of the health officers being met by imperial grants. The Government of India also advised local Governments to take powers, where these did not exist, to require a municipality to appoint a health officer and to veto the appointment of an unfit person. Such powers already exist in the Bombay presidency, and have recently been taken by legislation in Bengal. Simultaneously, the Government of India recommended the system in force in Madras whereby every municipality is required to employ one or more trained sanitary inspectors in proportion to population. Sanitary inspectors are now being employed in large numbers in towns. In addition, the civil surgeon in every district is the sanitary adviser of the local authorities and in most provinces controls the vaccination staff. The provision of an increased staff of sanitary engineers is engaging urgent attention.

The Government of India attach great importance to the organisation of voluntary agencies and have recently made a grant of Rs. 20,000 (£1,333)—a sum equivalent to that given by the Bombay Government—to the Bombay sanitary association, which was founded in 1903, and now has corresponding branches in several districts and native states.

7. The policy of the Government of India is to keep the control of research under itself, but to decentralise other branches of sanitation. The creation of an imperial department is no departure from that policy, and the large imperial grants already mentioned have been made without any interference with provincial Governments. While the general direction of a policy of public health must remain with the central Government, all detailed control and executive action are, and will be, left to local Governments. The Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India is a touring officer empowered to consult and confer informally with local Governments and their officers upon matters connected with sanitation. He is not permitted to encroach upon the authority of local Government over the officers under their control.

8. The position of provincial sanitary commissioners towards the administrative heads of the medical department varies somewhat in different provinces. The Government of India do not wish to interfere with the arrangements which local Governments may consider best suited to local conditions, but they desire to insist on the importance of defining the functions of the two officers and securing to the sanitary commissioner the position of responsible technical adviser to the local Government in all matters affecting public health.

9. In every province, sanitary boards have been composed with varying powers, some being merely advisory, others having authority to sanction schemes and allot funds. These boards are composed of officers belonging to the medical, sanitary, engineering and other branches of the civil services with the addition of non-officials. The Government of India view with favour and confidence the devolution of financial authority and responsibility to these boards, and they commend to local Governments the appointment of a permanent salaried secretary to the board where this has not been done. They believe that such an appointment, wherever made, has resulted in an increase of efficiency.

Training of staff.

10. Arrangements for training the superior sanitary staff are now engaging the attention of the Government of India. The chief difficulty at present is to provide courses in practical hygiene and in the study of the bacteriology and etiology of tropical diseases. It is hoped in the near future to make arrangements in India for the former, and to utilise the schools of tropical medicine at Calcutta and elsewhere for the latter. Meanwhile, a British diploma in public health is required from candidates for the post of deputy sanitary commissioners and health officers of the first class. The problems of public health in India are vitally complicated by the fact that biting insects are a prominent factor in the dissemination of disease, and it is obviously desirable to provide in India, as soon as possible, a complete course of training for sanitary officers.

Training classes for sanitary inspectors are now held in all the more important provinces.

11. A substantial beginning has thus been made for the development of a department of public health and Indians have been freely enlisted for it. The posts of deputy sanitary commissioner and health officer are now open to Indians. Nine deputy sanitary commissioners out of 26 and the majority of health officers are Indians. The new bacteriological department consisting of 28 officers is also open to duly qualified Indians.

As health officers and sanitary engineers gradually relieve deputy sanitary commissioners of much of the drudgery of inspection and routine work, it is hoped that the latter will be set free to deal with epidemics and communicable diseases from a higher plane, and to consider issues of public health wider than those which they are able to review to-day. It is, therefore, important to provide in advance free interchange between them, the laboratory workers and those carrying out practical research in the field.

Research.

12. Research is slowly lifting the veil which hides the secrets of disease and mortality and opening up fields of inquiry scarcely thought of a generation ago. The discovery by Sir Ronald Ross of the part played by the mosquito in the communication of malaria and the appointment of the Plague Commission in 1898 are landmarks in the history of Indian Sanitation. In 1902, a research institute was founded at Guindy in Madras, named the King Institute after Lieutenant-Colonel King, C.I.E., I. M. S., in view of his devoted efforts in the cause of sanitation in that presidency. In 1905, Lord Curzon's Government summed up the position and the policy of the Government of India in regard to the establishment of laboratories for the study of problems of public health in India. The functions of the central laboratory were original research, the preparation of curative sera and the training of scientific workers. The functions of the provincial laboratories were diagnosis and special research connected with local conditions. This policy has been steadily developed. The Central Research Institute has been established at Kasauli. The Plague Research Laboratory at Parel has been extended and re-equipped and is now the bacteriological laboratory for the Bombay Presidency; and a proposal is under consideration to attach to it a school of tropical medicine. A research laboratory and school of tropical medicine are under construction at Calcutta. Pasteur institutes exist at Kasauli and Coonoor. A third is about to be established in Burma, and it is under discussion to establish others in Assam (where it will be combined with a research laboratory) and Bombay.

Besides the routine work connected with the bacteriological diagnosis of disease, anti-rabic treatment, the manufacture of various vaccines and sera and general research, these laboratories at different times have been the centres of many special investigations, notable amongst which are those on plague and enteric fever. It is hoped that before long each province in India will have a laboratory fully equipped for research.

Indian Research Fund Association.

13. The foundation of the Indian Research Fund Association in 1911 has marked an important era in sanitary progress. The control and management of the association are vested in a governing body, the president of which is the Member in charge of the Education Department of the Government of India. The governing body is assisted by a "scientific advisory board" of which not less than three members have seats on the governing body. They examine all proposals for work in connection with the scientific objects of the association and report as to their importance and feasibility. The members of this board are appointed for one year, but are eligible for re-election, and they have power to add to their number. The present members are the Director-General, Indian Medical Service, the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India, the Director of the Central Research Institute at Kasauli, the Officer in charge of the Central Malarial Bureau and the Assistant Director-General, Indian Medical Service (Sanitary): Sir Ronald Ross has been elected an honorary consulting member. The membership of the Indian Research Fund Association is open to non-officials. Every donor of Rs. 5,000 is entitled to become a permanent member, while every subscriber of Rs. 100 per annum can be a temporary member. Members of the association are entitled to attend and take part in the annual general meeting of the association and to receive copies of the reports and other publications issued from time to time by the association. Although, so far, the fund has been financed solely by the Government of India, it is hoped that in time Indian philanthropists will contribute towards the expansion of the association by founding chairs of research, by financing experimental research measures and otherwise.

14. The association has been active and can already point to some achievement. Out of an income of Rs. 15 lakhs (£100,000) received since its incorporation and up to the end of 1913-14, an expenditure of over Rs. 14 lakhs (£93,333) has been sanctioned. In 1911, Major S. P. James, I. M. S., was deputed to study yellow fever in its endemic area and to draw up proposals for protecting India against the introduction of the disease. Those proposals are still under consideration. In the meanwhile, stegomyia surveys have been carried out in Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Karachi and Rangoon and other seaports. Anti-malaria schemes based on preliminary surveys have been carried out at the cost of Rs. 6,02,000 (£40,133). Investigations are at present in progress into the problems connected with the prevalence of cholera, kala-azar, dysentery, leprosy and goitre, as well as inquiries into the pharmacology of cinchona derivatives, the use of hydrocyanic acid gas as a pulicide and the fixation of chemical standards of purity for milk and milk products. Other investigations are under consideration regarding bacteriological standards of purity for water-supplies, the different anti-cholera vaccines and sera, the methods of water filtration and silt removal best suited to Indian conditions, and the etiology of diabetes and the fevers of short duration. These will be started so soon as more trained research workers are available. It is hoped also to carry out, during the next non-epidemic season, an experiment in plague prevention on a large scale on the lines indicated in paragraph 22.

15. Besides financing the investigations conducted by its own staff, the association gives grants-in-aid to outside research on approved lines. The co-operation of other workers has been sought, and every encouragement has been given to them. Grants for research have been made, for instance, to Professor MacMahon, Dr. Hossack and Mr. Howlet. The services of Indians have also been enlisted. Dr. Korke is engaged in an important investigation into kala-azar, while Mr. Awati, a medical entomologist, is employed under the association. The Government of India cordially approve the policy of encouraging private enterprise in the cause of research.

16. The association has also started a journal for the publication of medical research work done in India—the "Indian Journal of Medical Research"—published quarterly. The favourable reception which has been accorded to the first three numbers is evidence of the increased interest that is being taken in sanitary science in India today.

17. The investigations enumerated above represent the work directly under the supervision of the Government of India. The local Governments also are fully alive to the importance of research, and in seven provinces nine special officers are at present engaged in investigating the causes underlying the local prevalence of malaria and devising suitable schemes for the mitigation of that disease.

18. It remains to consider the results of research as applied to the chief tropical diseases, always remembering that they are liable to revision or modification in the light of further investigation and discoveries.

Malaria.

The most important tropical disease is malaria. After allowance has been made for the tendency to attribute to fever deaths from other causes, malaria stands out as universally prevalent in India and in many tracts is a scourge far greater than either plague or cholera. It maims as well as kills and causes more sickness, misery and death than any other single disease. Measures for the prevention of malaria aim at breaking the cycle of infection in two ways—(a) by attacks on the parasites in man, and (b) by the destruction of mosquitoes. To the former class belong the different systems of quinine prophylaxis and treatment; and to the latter, all those measures which aim at abolishing mosquito-breeding grounds. Both methods have been successful in other countries and both have been tried extensively in India. The following propositions represent the experience gained up to date:—

(1) The conditions and causes underlying the prevalence of malaria vary greatly in different places, and no one anti-malarial measure is suitable for all.

(2) Quinine both as a prophylactic and curative agent is of great value to the individual. Its powers of saving life, alleviating sickness and destroying sources of infection cannot be over-estimated. There should be no relaxation in the efforts to educate the people in the use of the drug: and its sale by shop-keepers in rural areas might well be encouraged.

(3) The regular administration of quinine to children in schools during the malarial season is a practical measure of easy application and of proved utility; it is valuable alike for its immediate good effects on the health of the scholars and as a means of spreading knowledge of the use of quinine.

(4) In any community under control quinine prophylaxis properly carried out is a valuable weapon in the fight against malaria: in India with its free population, the ignorance and apathy of the masses, their prejudice against the drug, their objection to medicine when not actually suffering from illness, and the fact that it must be continued over an indefinite number of years, greatly limit the value of quinine prophylaxis.

(5) In anti-larval operations it is not necessary to abolish all breeding grounds of mosquitoes, even of known carriers of malarial infection: a marked amelioration in health conditions will ensue if the chief breeding grounds of the malaria-carrying mosquitoes are cleared.

(6) Malaria surveys have brought to light important and unexpected facts regarding the causation of malaria in particular localities. For instance, the enquiries of Major Liston and Dr. Bentley in Bombay disclosed the fact that malaria did not arise from the swampy surroundings of the city and that the malaria-carrying mosquito was N. stephensi which bred in the numerous wells attached to private houses. Again, Major Christophers has demonstrated that malaria in the Andamans is due to a species of mosquito (M. ludlowi) which breeds in the brackish water of the creeks and that the mosquitoes infesting the rice-fields in the neighbourhood are innocuous.

(7) Notwithstanding the initial expense, those anti-malarial measures should be chosen which will act automatically, be independent of outside help and permanent in their effects: those which require regular repetition, constant attention or active co-operation on the part of the people, are, under present conditions, seldom durably effective.

(8) The treatment of permanent collections of water is important whether it be effected by (a) water tidiness, through sloping of banks and clearing of weeds, or (b) stocking with fish of proved utility as mosquito destroyers, or by both methods.

19. The Government of India have arranged classes for instruction in pratical malaria work twice a year. The course is so planned that each member of the class takes an actual part in the preparation of a malaria survey which will eventually be the basis of a practical scheme of malaria prevention. Already 155 medical officers in civil and military employ have passed through the classes. It is hoped before long to spread a large number of trained and active workers over the whole of India.

The Lucknow Sanitary Conference recommended that a malariologist and engineer should be deputed to Italy to study the methods of "colmate" and "bonificazione" under the auspices of the Indian Research Fund Association, and it is hoped to arrange for their deputation. The effect of silt deposit on the malarial conditions of deltaic areas in India is also receiving attention; and interesting experiments are being conducted by the Government of Bengal at Berhampur. Experiments in clearing jungle and undergrowth will shortly be undertaken.

20. The Plague Research Commission, which was constituted in 1905 and is still continuing its investigations, has thrown much light on the etiology and epidemiology of the disease. The chief conclusions that have been reached so far may be summarised as follows:—

Plague.

(1) In India, where the pneumonic form of the disease is relatively rare, plague is essentially a disease of rats communicable to man and a few of the lower animals; an epidemic amongst men is directly dependent upon an epizootic amongst rats.

(2) Plague spreads from rat to rat and from rat to man through the agency of the rat flea.

(3) The plague bacillus under natural conditions does not long retain its vitality outside the body of the rat, the rat flea, or man.

(4) Plague has a definite seasonal prevalence, generally constant for any given place, but varying in different parts of India; investigation shows that the plague season coincides with the season of maximum prevalence of rat fleas.

(5) Infection is carried from place to place only over very short distances by the spontaneous movements of rats: in other cases, infection is carried either (a) by the agency of man or personal effects acting as a means of transport for infected fleas, or (b) by means of merchandise, chiefly grain, which may contain rats as well as fleas. It is not yet established which of these two agencies is the more important, but recent work, both in India and the Far East, has emphasised the importance of grain as a vehicle for the transmission of infection.

(6) In comparatively few places in India does plague infection survive the adverse conditions of the non-epidemic season: such places are usually either (a) large towns, or (b) places which have been infected late in the epidemic season.

(7) In places which have suffered from repeated and severe epidemics of plague, the rats have become less susceptible to plague than are the rats in places which have remained plague free or have suffered but slightly.

21. These conclusions have been arrived at after much careful and painstaking research and constitute a great advance on the knowledge of plague, which was available when, in 1896, it first appeared in Bombay. They point, apparently, to a simple solution of the plague problem—no rats no plague. But this solution is not attainable unless the population concerned is convinced of the danger of living in close association with the rat and is ready to co-operate in its extermination. Unfortunately, attempts at rat destruction by trapping or poison frequently meet with active opposition. Experience in India suggests that owing to the excessive fecundity of the animals, general rat destruction, even when applied to extensive areas, gives only a temporary reduction of rat infestation and has a limited sphere of usefulness as an anti-plague measure.

22. In one direction, however, well directed efforts at rat destruction may prove useful. In each epidemic a number of places are infected late in the season and in certain of these plague survives the non-epidemic period only to break out in a virulent form when the conditions of spread again become more favourable. These localities are potential foci of extensive infection. It would seem important to concentrate the energies of the plague preventive staff on them in well organised schemes of rat destruction carried out during the quiescent period before the commencement of the next epidemic season.

23. Much can be done, indirectly, to reduce the number of rats in towns and villages, by diminishing their food supply. In any place the number of rats is in proportion to the quantity of food which they can obtain. Efficient scavenging and the protection of food-stuffs from the depredations of rats are important from this point of view. The markets, grain stores and shops, in most parts of India, are so placed and constructed as to give food and shelter to large numbers of rats. Experiments are being carried out with a view to discovering the best practical means of disinfecting grain stores and godowns. It is not practicable at present to remove grain markets and godowns outside towns, to prevent them from being used as dwellings for men, to insist on solid masonry buildings, or to prohibit the stabling of horses and cattle in the precincts of dwelling houses. But these measures and the storage of grain in bulk instead of in bags may, with the progress of education, hereafter enter the zone of practicability. The exclusion of rats from houses is important. In several provinces experiments with different types of so-called rat-proof houses have been made with varying degrees of success. The results suggest that no form of house could remain rat-free for long in India owing to the habits of the people. Even were this not the case it would obviously be impracticable, for financial reasons, to render dwelling houses in the towns and villages of India rat-proof on anything like a large scale. On the other hand, the individual can protect himself by providing his house with masonry floors and walls and windows enough to give ample light and air to every room and by preventing accumulations of rubbish amongst which rats can build their nests. The rat requires shelter for breeding, is mainly nocturnal in its habits and prefers darkness to light.

24. Three other measures remain to be considered—evacuation, disinfection and inoculation. The evacuation of all houses in large towns, on the occurrence of rat mortality therein or human plague cases in adjacent dwellings, is rarely possible, but in villages and parts of smaller towns it is a valuable means of checking an epidemic of plague. Disinfection to be efficacious should be directed against the rat and the rat-flea. It is of little value when it leaves both untouched. The pratical objections to compulsory inoculations with anti-plague vaccine on a large scale continue; but the safety and efficiency of inoculation as a personal preventive measure against infection has been abundantly proved, and in certain areas the prejudice against it appears to be diminishing. The Government of India desire that every facility should be afforded to any one wishing to obtain this protection for himself or his family and they commend to local Governments the employment of carefully selected private practitioners to this end.

Cholera.

25. Cholera is now much less prevalent than formerly, but frequently occasions severe epidemics and still remains a constant cause of mortality. Epidemics have in several recent cases been traced to pilgrims returning from places of religious pilgrimage, at which there had been no recognised outbreak of the disease. In 1912, Major Greig was deputed to make a special investigation of the whole subject. That investigation, which still continues, has added to knowledge regarding the propagation of cholera and has established the fact that not only cholera convalescents, but also healthy persons who have been in contact with cholera cases, can act as 'carriers' of the disease. It has also been shown that the germs of the disease can be recovered from a patient's dejecta kept under natural conditions for a variable but frequently considerable period, and that flies may play an important part in the dissemination of infection. These observations, while in no way opposed to previous knowledge that cholera is a water-borne disease, accentuate the importance of careful and thorough conservancy.

Small-pox.

26. Small-pox is not a tropical disease, but it used to be so rife in India as to be associated among Hindus with its own special goddess. It now occupies a small place in the mortality returns. This result is due to the spread of vaccination during the latter half of the last century.

Vaccination.

Formerly, nearly all vaccination was effected by human lymph, but within recent years arm-to-arm vaccination has been steadily replaced by the use of pure glycerinated or lanolinated calf lymph. The change has been doubly beneficial; it does away with the necessity of breaking the visicle in the child's arm, a simple operation but one which exposes the wound to contamination by extraneous germs; and it ensures that the vaccination is effected with a pure and fully potent lymph with consequent increase of protection. The change has been especially welcomed by educated Indians. Madras, Bombay, Bengal, Burma, the United Provinces, the Punjab, the Central Provinces and Assam have each now their own calf lymph depôts, and the opening of another for the province of Bihar and Orissa is under consideration. Grants of Rs. 2,00,000 (£13,333) were given from imperial revenues last year to improve the depôts in the United Provinces, the Punjab and Burma, and to establish the new depôt in the Central Provinces.

Tuberculosis.

27. The prevalence of tuberculosis throughout India especially in the large cities is undoubted. In some of the latter, the mortality exceeds that of certain crowded European cities. The difficulties of coping with the disease in India are immense and demand the fullest co-operation between Government and private agency. One or more officers will be detailed to investigate the causes underlying the disease to organise the diffusion of information, and to advise regarding measures for the prevention of infection: the services of Dr. Lankester have already been secured by the Indian Research Fund Association for this purpose. Recent research appears to show that tuberculosis in India is chiefly human and not bovine in origin. Indian cattle so far as is known are practically free from the disease, and Indians do not as a rule drink unboiled milk. The source of the disease is in the homes of the people, and the relief of congested areas and the provision of sufficient light and air in human tenements are preventive measures of great value. The Government of India invite attention to the recommendation of the Lucknow Sanitary Conference that circumspection should be exercised before instituting at considerable cost further large sanatoria. They consider that inexpensive buildings suitable as model dwellings for the people may prove of great educative value and they desire to encourage tuberculosis hospitals and dispensaries. They also take this opportunity of communicating the warning of the Lucknow conference against the indiscriminate use of the tuberculin by unqualified medical practitioners.

Infant mortality.

28. No summary of public health is complete without a reference to infant mortality. In 1911, of 4,752,152 male children and 4,457,551 females born in India, 1,016,523 males and 873,677 females died. In other words, about one-fifth of the children born died within the first year of their life. It is difficult to arrive at the actual causes of this high rate of mortality. The figures at the disposal of Government are often of doubtful accuracy, and the comparison of figures from different localities is frequently fallacious. On a broad view of the subject the causes of infant mortality may thus be summarised: (1) malaria operating both directly on the infant and indirectly through the mother; (2) diseases due to insanitary surroundings and exposure to infection especially through the medium of flies; (3) diseases due to ignorance on the part of the mother with regard to the feeding and care of the infant; (4) accidents of child birth and diseases attendant thereon. For (3) and (4) the custom of early marriage and the primitive and insanitary methods of midwifery are largely responsible. The latter lead directly to the death of the infant from tetanus and other diseases, and indirectly increase the infant mortality by depriving children of their natural nourishment either through the death of the mother or the failure of her milk as the result of sepsis. Deficiency in the supply of cow's milk has not been proved to be a predominant cause of infant mortality in India; but the question of improving both the quality and the quantity of the milk-supply without increasing its cost is engaging earnest attention (vide paragraph 42)

It is hoped that the instruction of mothers and midwives will engage the attention of all medical women practising in India and especially interest the women's medical service which has recently been established. In some of the large cities in India, notably Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, nurse health visitors have been appointed by municipalities to visit the people in their homes and assist and instruct mothers in the elementary principles of hygiene In Bombay, an interesting experiment has been started by Dr. Turner in the form of lectures to the midwives Another is likely to be made under the auspices of the Indian Research Fund Association in Delhi, where it is proposed to detail two trained nurses for work as health visitors.

Vital statistics.

29. The course of sanitary reform is much impeded by the want of complete and accurate vital statistics. Without them it is difficult to gauge the effects of sanitary measures or to convince people of their efficacy. The difficulties in the way of improving the reporting and recording agency especially in rural areas are great; but systematic checking and supervision of returns should yield good results. Dispensary returns and voluntary notification by private medical practitioners are useful as checks but are only partial in their scope. A comprehensive scheme for the improvement of general reporting is required. The Government of India invite the attention of local Governments to the importance of the subject.

30. The Government of India recognise that differences in local conditions preclude the issue of any general instructions but they commend the following propositions for consideration:—

(a) The reporting of vital occurrences should not be left exclusively to the municipal staff; reporting by the head of the household also should be insisted on. The two reports would then be available to check one another.

(b) The actual registration should be done not as an extra duty but by special registrars who should, if possible, possess a medical qualification. In the case of deaths, inquiries regarding the symptoms of the deceased could then be made from the persons reporting and some check on the diagnosis of the cause of death could be obtained. Many people are attended during their last illness by unqualified persons or die without medical attendance.

(c) The registrar should be required to verify at least 10 per cent. of the reported births and deaths and this verification should, as far as possible, include all particulars such as cause, date, age, sex, place, etc.

(d) The health officer should be in charge of the vital statistics in the town and should be responsible for supervising and checking the work.

(e) Experiments might be made in obtaining accurate registration in typical areas by means of a special staff which would also be employed in healing the sick.

Sanitary surveys.

31. Concurrently with attention to the registration of vital statistics the Government of India commend to local Governments the importance of sanitary surveys on broad lines. Something has been done in this direction and valuable reports have been drawn up, giving the real health conditions of towns and particular localities and indicating the existence of any special sickness or mortality and the definite causes underlying them. The Government of India desire that systematic working plans should be drawn up where this has not already been done with a view to mapping out the sanitary conditions of all the more important towns and localities in which sickness or mortality is above normal. This will occupy years of steady preparation; but as deputy sanitary commissioners are relieved of much of the routine work which at present they have to perform they should be able to carry this undertaking to a successful issue. The preparation of drainage surveys in towns in advance of needs obviates waste in the long run. In the absence of such surveys, work is often commenced in a haphazard way without due consideration of a scheme as a whole.

Urban sanitation.

32. Urban sanitation has, as already observed, received much attention of late years. It falls generally under four heads, viz., conservancy, water-supply, drainage and town-planning with improvement of housing and the relief of congested areas. In the forefront of these stands conservancy.

Conservancy.

33. The importance of efficient scavenging with speedy and complete removal of all night-soil and rubbish from the vicinity of habitations and its satisfactory disposal can scarcely be exaggerated. Yet probably no department of public health work is more neglected in many Indian towns. The strict rules of the caste system have for centuries relegated everything connected with this work to the outcast, and the people, as a rule, evince little if any interest in the conservancy even of their own houses. To this neglect must be attributed the plague of flies which at certain seasons is experienced in every Indian town. Apart from the discomfort which they cause flies are known to be the disseminators of many diseases, including cholera, enteric fever, tuberculosis, dysentery and diarrhœa and are largely responsible for the heavy mortality amongst infants. The all India sanitary conferences at Madras and Lucknow drew prominent attention to the danger to health caused by the presence of these noxious insects, and the results of the recent "anti-fly" campaign at Delhi suggest that a large reduction in the number of flies is by no means an impossible task.

34. Whether incineration or shallow trenching or either of these methods of conservancy combined with water carriage is the best in any particular case will depend very largely on local conditions and customs. With the extension of drainage and sewerage systems, water carriage of all night-soil, with ultimate disposal on sewage farms, should give the best result. In the majority of towns, however, it will be long before this is generally practicable and the choice rests between incineration and trenching. Of the two methods incineration is safer and on this account, if conditions permit, is preferable. Trenching is often thought to be more economical; but the profits obtainable from trenching or pitting of night-soil and sale of the poudrette disappear, or are largely reduced, when the expense of carriage and supervision is taken into account. The material consideration in all cases is that the removal and disposal should be prompt. As education spreads and the number of health officers and sanitary inspectors increases, improved results may be anticipated.

Water-supply.

35. Few subjects have received more attention of late than the provision of a piped supply of filtered water in towns. Complete figures are not available, but sums amounting to at least Rs. 3,51,58,297 (£2,343,886) have been spent during the last 20 years on completed schemes. Projects costing Rs. 1,40,03,433 (£933,562) are under construction and projects costing Rs 1,14,44,750 (£762,983) have been prepared and sanctioned. These figures are exclusive of the expenditure in the presidency towns and Rangoon.

36. The demand for piped and filtered water-supply grows, and is likely to grow more rapidly in future. While recognising the need for treating the question with due regard to local conditions, the Government of India offer the following general observations:—

(a) When piped water-supplies were first introduced, in the face of opposition, it was necessary that the charges should be made as low as possible. That stage has now been passed, and there appears no good reason why water-supplies should not be conducted on a business footing and the water charged for like any other commodity. An interesting discussion on the financing of water-supplies was introduced by the Hon'ble Mr. Curtis at the Madras sanitary conference.

(b) On the whole, the provision of piped filtered water in towns has not been followed by that reduction in water-borne disease which might have been expected. This is probably due in most cases to the large number of wells, both public and private, which still remain in use. The closure of many of these wells is much to be desired, but the owners are unlikely to consent to this so long as the piped supply is intermittent, and is drawn off hot or unpleasantly warm during the summer. In any case the substitution of a constant for an intermittent supply will shortly have to be considered as pipes get older and in-suction declares itself. The warmth of the water is more difficult to deal with, but much might be done by burying pipes deeper in the ground and carrying house pipes inside instead of outside houses.

(c) Excessive wastage is common and causes not only an unnecessary burden on the municipality but frequently also a defective supply in the higher portions of the distribution. The employment of a regular waste-detection staff has in most cases been found to make for economy and efficiency.

Drainage.

37. Drainage schemes, on modern lines, are the basis of all sanitary improvement in urban areas. The demand for them is scarcely less than that for piped water and is steadily on the increase. As in the case of water-supply complete figures are not available, but the known expenditure during the last twenty years has been considerable and is now rapidly increasing. The expenditure on completed works outside the presidency towns and Rangoon during that period amounted to Rs. 97,65,049 (£651,003), whereas the cost of the works under construction is estimated at Rs. 1,54,26,502 (£1,028,033). In the beginning precedence over drainage was given to piped water-supply, but experience has demonstrated the advantage of introducing both concurrently. Without drainage there is no means of carrying off the surplus water and without piped water-supply it is difficult to flush the drains properly.

38. When drainage schemes on modern lines were first started in this country there seems to have been a bias against the use of sewers and, wherever possible, open drains were adopted. Experience has shown that the preference for the open drain, and the fear that sewers would give excessive trouble, were not well founded. On the contrary, much of the advantage of a drainage system is lost if only open drains are used, as the old system of hand-carriage latrines has to be continued. Moreover, economy in establishment is possible only in the case of a sewerage system.

39. The Government of India desire to invite the attention of local Governments to the importance of providing adequate facilities for the isolation of cases of epidemic diseases. The isolation of individuals suffering from infectious diseases is often desirable and sometimes necessary, and it would seem desirable to have in every important municipality a small well-built segregation hospital in charge of a qualified medical practitioner, who might be one of the medical registrars for vital statistics.

Epidemic diseases.

A revised set of regulations under the Indian Ports Act for the prevention of the spread of infectious and contagious diseases is under consideration.

40. Pilgrimages necessitating as they do the collection of large numbers of persons, often more than a million, at one place at one time have an important sanitary aspect mainly in connection with cholera (vide paragraph 25) and other communicable diseases. The Government of India recently decided to examine the sanitary arrangements at the chief places of pilgrimage throughout India and local Governments were asked to appoint provincial committees for this purpose under the presidency of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India with a view to formulate practical schemes of improvement. The inquiry is still in progress, but the Government of India have already made a grant of Rs. 2 lakhs (£13,333) and promised an additional grant of 4 laks of rupees (£26,666) spread over four years towards the improvement of the pilgrim route to Badrinath; and they have made a further recurring grant of Rs. 20,000 (£1,333) a year for the same object. The important question of improving the conditions of the pilgrimage to the Hedjaz by Indian Mussalmans is undergoing close scrutiny. The Governor-General in Council anticipates that these inquiries will lead to signal sanitary improvements and promote the convenience and comfort of many millions of His Majesty's loyal Indian subjects.

Pilgrim centres and pilgrimages.

41. The adulteration of food and drugs is common and has an important bearing on public health. Provisions for dealing with adulteration of food-stuffs exist in most municipal enactments in India, but these are confined to municipal areas and are restricted in their operation. Bombay and the United Provinces have special laws dealing with the question. The Government of India have recently enquired from local Governments as to the desirability of legislation, imperial or provincial, on the subject. The question is not free from difficulty, as, besides the necessity of fixing standards, a competent staff of analysts and inspectors is necessary, and for any real success the co-operation of the people is required.

Adulteration of food and drugs.

42. The adulteration of milk is almost universal in Indian Bazars and a large proportion of the milk consumed is contaminated. In most cities, the milk-supply is in the hands of men ignorant of the elements of sanitation and addicted to uncleanly practices. Moreover, the milk when stored and in transit to market is liable to contamination in several ways. On the other hand, the price of milk is already very high and the problem of improving the purity of the supply without increasing the price to such an extent as to cause hardship to the poorer classes is a difficult one.

Adulteration of milk.

The Lucknow sanitary conference recommended that the development of the dairy industry and the organisation of the transport and sale of milk should ordinarily precede measures of sanitary restriction; and that there should be mutual help and co-operation between sanitarians, milk dealers and the agricultural department. That department is already considering how to develop a profitable dairy animal, a measure largely dependent on suitable and regular feeding. While local authorities should clearly insist on cleanliness in the conditions under which cattle are milked and dairy produce is manufactured, stored, or transported in towns, the removal of cattle so far as possible to cheap, healthy and natural surroundings outside cities is a measure greatly to be commended. The establishment of co-operative dairy farms in the United Provinces, the Central Provinces and elsewhere has so far been attended with success and should be encouraged. Attempts might well be made to induce gwalas to organise milk production outside cities and its transport to market on co-operative principles. Should these methods prove successful, it may be possible without raising the price to bring the milk-supply under necessary sanitary control. The Government of India commend the whole question to the early attention of local Governments. With regard to milk standards, conditions in India differ from those in Europe and chemical standards should be fixed by persons possessing adequate local knowledge and experience, and with due regard to local conditions.

43. While much has been done to provide drainage and pure water in large cities, there can be little hope of improving their sanitary condition permanently until measures are taken to relieve congested areas and to provide broader streets and buildings more open to sun and air. The constitution in 1898 of the Improvement Trust in Bombay marked a notable step in advance. By the end of 1912-13, the Bombay Trust had incurred an expenditure of Rs. 488 lakhs (£3,253,333).

Town planning and relief of congested areas.

towards schemes aggregating Rs. 802 lakhs (£5,346,666). Broad roads have been driven through the heart of the city, slum areas have been abolished, and dwellings provided for the accommodation of the poorer classes. The Calcutta Improvement Trust constituted in 1911 is now developing similar schemes for the improvement and development of Calcutta. Funds for these great projects have been provided mainly from local taxation and municipal contributions, supplemented in the case of each city by an Imperial grant of Rs. 50 lakhs (£333,333) and in the case of Calcutta by a recurring grant of Rs. 1½ lakhs (£10,000) for 60 years. In other provinces, similar works have been carried out on a smaller scale in the larger towns, notably in the United Provinces and at Lucknow.

There has been, as already stated, an increasing desire on the part of the well-to-do in cities to escape from their present insanitary surroundings and to obtain houses in more open positions outside city limits. In India, as in England, municipalities are confronted by the difficulty of obtaining land for town extensions except at prohibitive cost. The multiplicity of small owners in this country, and the impossibility of persuading them to co-operate, render any considered and comprehensive plan of town extension impossible in the absence of some controlling and co-ordinating authority armed with powers of compulsion. In their letter of 26th July 1912, the Government of India indicated their opinion that where land on the outskirts of a town was mainly agricultural and could be acquired cheaply en bloc, the local body would probably be well advised to purchase it outright.

44. Such a policy, however, will, for financial reasons, often be impossible on a large scale. Where the cost of acquisition is prohibitive, control may be preferable to acquisition, and in their circular letter of the 26th July 1912, the Government of India drew attention to the features of a scheme under discussion in the Bombay Presidency which has now been incorporated in a Town Planning Bill. The principal feature of this scheme is that the cost is apportioned and recovered from the various persons and interests concerned in the shape of a development contribution calculated in proportion to the increased value which is estimated to accrue to each plot on the completion of the scheme, the tax that can be levied from any one owner being limited, as in England, to one-half of the betterment estimated to accrue. The local body remains liable for any excess cost not covered by the tax. Such a scheme involves taking powers to pool and redistribute small holdings in a form suitable for building purposes. It has the advantage of reducing capital outlay while securing for public purposes a share in the profits of the transaction. The Government of India have also invited an examination of the provisions of municipal acts for dealing with insanitary areas and have inquired whether the limitations contained in the English Housing Acts on excessive compensation in areas, which, after due inquiry, have been declared insanitary, might not be introduced in India. The first step towards improvement is to fix a standard of light and ventilation suitable to local conditions; the next is to ensure that adequate building regulations providing for this standard are introduced by all municipal bodies and that a competent executive staff is appointed with full powers to carry them out. The whole question will be reviewed when the replies of local Governments have been received.

45. The difficulties which surround rural sanitation in India are well-known and persistent. Contaminated sites, polluted water-supply, badly constructed and insanitary dwellings, the habits and prejudices of the people raise obstacles to progress which in most provinces are still well-nigh insuperable. The Government of India have informed local Governments that they are at liberty to expend a portion of the imperial grants for urban sanitation or rural sanitation, provided practical schemes for this purpose are forthcoming; but they have postponed special imperial grants for this purpose until such schemes are more generally advanced. They fully appreciate the enormous importance of rural sanitation in a country which is mainly agricultural. Past experience and present conditions, however, indicate that the subject is still one for experiment on lines conceived to attract the co-operation of the people. Without their cordial help no sanitary staff could effectually deal with the village sanitation of the two hundred and twenty millions who inhabit rural areas in British India. The danger of employing low-paid and imperfectly trained subordinates in a matter so closely affecting village-life is now generally recognised and should never be out of mind.

Rural sanitation.

46. The following observations are based on practical experience of rural sanitation :—

(a) Travelling dispensaries may be used to spread a knowledge of the simple facts regarding the more common diseases. For this purpose the sub-assistant surgeons in charge should be given a special training in hygiene. Once they become known to the people as healers of the sick their advice as sanitarians may become more acceptable.

(b) The improvement of the village water-supply is as important as it is difficult. Apparently, excellent results have been obtained by disinfection of wells with permanganate of potash. Experiments are being made in different parts of India in the use of tube-wells, etc. It might serve as an useful object lesson to use pumps and tube-wells for the provision of water at fairs, schools, hospitals and local public offices. In some localities, a tank supply alone is possible and the difficulty is to protect even new tanks from pollution.

(c) In several provinces, notably in Madras, village unions, or circles, have been formed and their committees entrusted with small grants for the improvement of the sanitation of the village site. This measure might be extended experimentally elsewhere. It is calculated to encourage discussion and enquiry regarding sanitary work.

(d) Village midwives are, in some districts, encouraged by small grants of money and rewards to attend at the headquarters hospital for a short and simple course of training. These measures open up possibilities with reference to a reduction in infantile mortality and children's diseases generally.

(e) In most districts in India, the civil surgeon is also in theory the sanitary officer of the district. His duties at headquarters, however, do not allow him to tour and inspect in the district to the extent that is necessary: even in the case of epidemics in the district it is sometimes not possible for him to leave headquarters. In some provinces, district sanitary officers have been appointed and there can be little doubt that many more such appointments are required and that one of the most urgent and hopeful measures for promoting rural sanitation is the appointment of well-qualified and whole-time district health officers to control and organise all sanitary arrangements and experiments in the district.

Need for education.

47. The diffusion of sound education will, however, remain the most potent and penetrating instrument of sanitation among a population which still views it for the most part with hostility, or unconcern. The claims of hygiene as part of their edcational policy were recognised by the Government of India in their educational resolution of the 21st February 1913. It may be hoped that before many years have passed educational institutions will have become missions of sanitation in their own vicinity and beyond. Meanwhile, some simple knowledge of the more common infectious diseases may with advantage be diffused. The difficulties are considerable and systematic organisation is required. The Indian branch of the St. John Ambulance Association has offered its valuable assistance. In several provinces, pictorial leaflets are distributed and simple lantern lectures and demonstrations are given at fairs and other large gatherings, while in Bombay popular lectures to teachers, students and others have been organised by Major Glen Liston. The Indian Research Fund Association has decided to establish a central bureau where lanterns and lantern slides, pictures, and skeleton lectures can be stocked for issue on loan. Much may be done by utilising the services of municipal health officers and medical subordinates attached to travelling dispensaries and by enlisting the sympathies and active help of medical women, private medical practitioners, and private philanthropic agencies and persons. Sanitation must begin at home and as the Hon'ble Sir Pardey Lukis and Colonel Firth, the former on the civil, the latter on the military side, have pointed out, there will never be any real advance in domestic or personal hygiene until the women of the country realise its advantages and necessity. The encouragement of medical women to preach the gospel of health inside the zenana and to organise purdah parties for simple lantern demonstration lectures and the employment of nurse visitors as in Delhi, Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, are to be commended. Periodical local conferences and publications similar to that recently issued by the Bombay Government entitled 'Some recent sanitary developments in the Bombay Presidency' are very useful and keep the question of sanitation before the public mind. Other methods for preparing people to combat preventible disease and premature mortality may suggest themselves. There is room for many workers in the sanitary field. The Governor General in Council appeals with confidence to all who have interest in the well-being of India to join with him and the local Governments in a sustained endeavour to give effect to His Imperial Majesty's most gracious wish that the homes of his Indian subjects may be brightened and their labour sweetened by the spread of knowledge with all that follows in its train, a higher level of thought, of comfort and of health.

Promotions and reversions in the Upper Subordinate Establishment—Rules regarding

GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

Order No. E.—9023.

Bombay Castle, 30th August 1916.

ORDER.—The Governor in Council has had under consideration the relative position and rates of promotion of Europeans and Indians in the Upper Subordinate Establishment of the Bombay Public Works Department, and is pleased to decide that in supersession of the orders contained in Government Resolution No. 631-E.—2180, dated 13th October 1865, and repeated in Government Resolution No. 401-E.—1585, dated 17th November 1896, the numerical proportions fixed may now be abolished except in the case of Sub-engineers of the 1st and 2nd grades In each of these two grades the number of Europeans employed shall not exceed 50 per cent. of the men in those grades. Subject to this condition all promotions of Europeans and Indians shall be in order of seniority, provided they are otherwise fit for promotion, and also by selection. In the case of Europeans now serving in the remaining four grades,* whose service in their present grade is less than 4 years, the promotion to the next higher grade will be subject to consideration at the time when their turn for promotion arrives. As a result of these orders the practice of making sub. pro tem. promotions against permanent vacancies, with a view to reserving them for the promotion of European subordinates, as soon as they have qualified by the time rule, will vanish, and the order promulgated in Government Resolution No. E.—27, dated 7th January 1910, directing that European subordinates should be permanently promoted at 4 years' intervals only is now withdrawn.

APPENDIX Q.

Translation.

To

THE COLLECTOR OF KOLABA.

We * * * * , Khots of * * * * , Taluka Mangaon, District Kolaba, give a Kabulayat in writing as follows:—A report bearing outward No. * * * , dated * * * , was made to the effect that the vahivat of the village of * * * * should be carried on according to the Khoti (system). Proceedings were held thereon and order bearing Kolaba Collector's inward No. * * * , dated * * * , was passed to the effect that till the introduction of the Revenue Survey or till further orders, an agreement for one year should be taken in writing from us. Accordingly we execute the following clauses about carrying on the vahivat :—

The full assessment of the said village fixed at the time of the survey is Rs. 376-14-0. We shall pay the same by instalments in the following manner:—

Rs. 94-3-0 15th December 1891.
Rs. 94-3-0 1st February 1892.
Rs. 94-3-0 15th March 1892.
Rs. 94-5-0 1st May 1892.

376-14-0

We shall pay the whole amount in the above four instalments.

2. Without making any excuse whatever on account of asmanisultani,* fire, blight, osadi,† etc., we shall pay the full amount as stated in clause 1 without waiting for others. On failure to do so, Government should recover the vasul in accordance with Act 17 of 1827 and other regulations and Acts about recovery of vasul, which are and may hereafter be applicable. We consent to it.

3. We shall pay Government the jamabandi‡ vasul stated in the first clause, and in consideration therefor shall take vasul from the tenants as stated in the following clauses :—

4. We shall take in cash, in accordance with the Joint Rules, in four instalments only, as much akar§ as may have been entered in the Dharekaris' names in the Government papers. We shall not take anything more. For the vasul so taken, we shall pass a receipt in the form annexed hereto.

5. In accordance with the previous practice the Dharekaris have a right to sell or mortgage or otherwise make over their lands to other persons. But as required by clause 9 of the Joint Rules a Dharekari should send to us his rajinama|| relating to the transfer and we shall send the same to the Collector for approval: and after its approval and return we shall arrange for the transfer.

6. If the Dharekaris do not pay the vasul I should get Government's assistance in recovering the same as is done in khalsa villages.

7. If a Dharekari tenant dies without leaving an heir, or leaves the village without making over the land to another for vahivat or for any other purpose, I shall report the matter to Government and after receiving orders I shall carry on the vahivat of his Dhara land as if it were Khot-nisbat land and not my private Dhara land, and without pleading any excuse shall pay the whole akar of the land fixed at the time of the Survey to be due from him.

8. The said village has been made over to us for the purpose of carrying on its vahivat for the current year 1891-92. We shall continue to the cultivating tenants or to their heirs as much of the Khot-nisbat land in the village as may have been entered in their names in the Government papers, without raising any objection. We shall recover from the tenants the amount proportionate to the akar on these lands fixed at the time of the Survey, viz., in the case of kharif land eight annas in cash per rupee, and in the case of varkas land, 5 annas 4 pies per rupee. We shall not take more. We shall execute to the tenants an agreement in the form annexed hereto, stating the fields, the tenants, the amount to be paid by them and the time of payment. We shall act as stated therein.

9. The phayada on the akar of Khot-nisbat lands, which may have been fixed for the entire village, should, after the completion of the annual vasulbaki, be distributed by the Vahivatdar (Khot) of the year among the sharers in proportion to their respective shares; and he should take receipts from the sub-sharers.

10. Before the commencement of the hapta, we shall enter in the tenants' receipt book the akar stated in the separate agreement to be due from them in respect of the Khot-nisbat lands in accordance with the jamabandi. We shall take only that amount and enter the same (as paid) in the receipt book at the time of payment. On our failure to give a receipt

* Calamitous visitations from heaven and evils proceeding from the ruler.

† Desolateness, depopulation.

‡ The settled amount of revenue.

we may be punished according to law. Besides what is stated in the agreement, we shall not take *faski, bundles of rice-straw, etc. If it be proved that we did so we may be charged with recovering more than the fixed amount of vasul and punished for the same under any law then in force and the laws and Acts which may subsequently become applicable.

11. If the Dharekari and the Khot-nisbat tenants do not pay the vasul in accordance with the agreement as stated above we shall have to ask Government's assistance in recovering the same as is done in khalsa villages. For this purpose it will be necessary to show the amount due from the tenants, the amount paid by them, and the unpaid balance. We shall for this purpose keep Kird and Khatavani books and shall produce the same when assistance is asked for.

12. If land be taken by Government for public purposes, such as rail-roads, etc., we shall not ask for any compensation. The akar at the survey (rates) on the land so taken by Government should be deducted.

13. A portion of the lands of the said village has been divided into survey numbers and kept by Government for protecting the trees thereon. We shall protect the trees thereon and shall not allow anybody to cut them nor shall we ourselves cut them. Similarly we shall not allow anyone to cultivate the land nor shall we cultivate it. In case anybody cultivates the land or cuts the trees thereon, we shall report (the matter) to Government. If Government decides to allow the grazing of cattle in the said reserved forest land, we shall allow cattle to graze therein and shall not object to it. We shall protect the teak and black-wood trees in any other part of the village besides the said numbers and shall not allow anybody to cut them nor shall we cut them. In case anybody cuts them we shall immediately report the same.

14. Government has conferred upon us the ownership of trees other than teak and black-wood trees which are now existing or may come into existence in future in uncultivated lands other than the abovementioned reserved forest land and the cultivated lands of the people about which there is dispute. We shall enjoy the same accordingly. But if we cut (them) we shall act in accordance with rule 11 of the Joint Rules.

15. When summoned by Government (officials) we shall attend. On our failure to be present we shall abide by the order of fine, etc., that may be passed by Government.

16. We shall hand over to the next year's Vahivatdar the papers relating to the vahivat of the village which may be with us and also similar papers and orders which may be issued to us by Government and we shall take a receipt for the papers received by him from us. We shall produce the papers when Government may want them for inspection.

17. We shall manage to keep in repair the boundary marks put up by the Survey Department and protect them according to the rules in that behalf supplied to us. We shall inspect them and make a report about them when ordered to do so.

18. We shall carry on the vahivat as stated in the above clauses. On our failure to do so Government may impose on us any fine it thinks fit and recover it as if it were (land) revenue. Or if Government deem it necessary to keep the village under attachment it may do so. We shall acquiesce in it. If there be any profit during the period of attachment we shall say nothing about it nor shall we demand it.

This agreement consisting of 18 clauses has been executed by us with free consent. Signature. Dated.

No. 531 of 1917.

OFFICE OF THE REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS.

Bombay Castle, 3rd March 1917.

CIRCULAR.

As several references have been made to him on the subject, the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs desires to indicate briefly the attitude which he considers that Government Pleaders should adopt towards political movements, and he believes that Government Pleaders themselves will be glad to have some specific guidance in this respect. It should be understood that the same rule will be held to apply to Public Prosecutors, the Assistants of Government Pleaders and Public Prosecutors, Subordinate Government Pleaders and Honorary Assistants.

2. Government Pleaders are required in the course of their duties, not only to represent the views and act in the interest of the Government of the day in cases coming before the courts, but to give advice on legal matters concerning Government business of any kind or in any department (see rules 60 and 61 of the Rules for the conduct of the Legal Affairs of Government). The Government Pleader also occupies an important position with reference to the Bar and can exercise considerable influence. The nature of the Government Pleader's duties, therefore, is such that if by his conduct he identifies himself with any political movement, the objects or methods of which are in any essential matter opposed to the policy and expressed views of the Government or are condemned by the Government, he incapacitates himself to a greater or lesser degree, according to the circumstances, from honourably fulfilling the duties of his appointment. It is unnecessary to attempt to enumerate the particular political movements or the specific acts which are open to objection on these grounds, but a Government servant can seldom have any genuine doubt in his own mind on a question of this kind, and the Legal Remembrancer would be glad if any case of doubt were referred to him.

3. At the same time the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs desires to make it known that he will call upon any Government Pleader, who adopts towards a political question an attitude which is inconsistent with his duties or liable to be misconstrued, either to desist from such conduct or to resign his appointment. (See rule 21* of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules hereto appended.)

Rule 21 of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules.

"21. A Government servant may not take part in, or subscribe in aid of, any political movement in India or relating to Indian affairs. Nor may he attend any political meeting his presence at which is likely to be misconstrued or to impair his public usefulness. When there is room for doubt whether any action which a Government servant proposes to take will contravene the provisions of this rule, he should refer the matter for orders to the local Government to which, or the Government servant to whom, he is immediately subordinate."

Report of the Inspectress of Urdu Girls' Schools, Central Division, on the Central Urdu Girls' School, Poona, for the year 1913-14.

This school which has been placed under my sole management has taken up a very great portion of my time and energy during the year. A few words regarding the same therefore would not be out of place. In Government Resolution, Educational Department, No. 1071 of the 12th April 1913, it was contemplated at first to make one of the big Municipal Urdu Girls' Schools of Poona, the basis of the Central School. But at the suggestion of the Acting Educational Inspector, Central Division, the original plan was abandoned and it was decided to start an entirely new school in a healthy locality somewhat distant from Mahomedan quarters in the city. I had to organise the school quite anew and had to encounter many difficulties. Soon after its commencement the recrudescence of the plague seriously hampered my work. I am happy to report that there are 58 girls on the roll of the school this month (March 1914) and the number is daily increasing. Owing to an unusually long delay in the sanction of additional stipends for the pupils and the place of a cook for the school, resident stipendiaries have only been admitted in it this month. There were candidates from all the districts and I had to inspect some of them in their own homes in my tour to avoid the necessity of sending them back if they were found to be unfit. Out of 8 boarders sanctioned already 5 have joined this month and the other 3 are expected next month. These are all comparatively grown up girls and as it is against Mahomedan custom to send girls of marriageable age to live in boarding houses away from the supervision of their parents, I am personally not a little responsible in bringing these girls to the school. In accordance with the wishes of their parents pardah is strictly observed and due facilities are given for religious performances. As the success of this school is a very important matter from various points of view, much of time is naturally devoted to its management and control.

Report of the Inspectress of Urdu Girls' Schools, Central Division, on the Central Urdu Girls' School, Poona, for the year 1914-15.

The Urdu Central Girls' School at Poona has been under my sole management during the year under review. The average total number on rolls for the year is 89 as against 44 for the last year. Last year there were only 5 stipendiary resident students while this year there are 8, the maximum number sanctioned, besides 7 non-resident stipendiaries who receive Rs. 4 per month. There is also a resident pupil who pays for her board and residence. The resident stipendiaries come from all districts of the Division and there is one admitted even from Belgaum at the earnest request of the Mahomedan Deputy Educational Inspector, Belgaum, with the approval of the Director of Public Instruction. Two students have left the school last year, one on account of illness and the other on account of marriage. But their places were soon filled up by candidates who were waiting for vacancies.

These resident students are under the charge of a matron, an accomplished Mahomedan widow lady of a very respectable family. Under this matron there is a cook and an assistant who minister to their comforts. The matron keeps them under strict purdah and looks after their religious devotions. As the school was closed for a considerable time in 1913-14 for plague, there was only an annual inspection. All the stipendiary students excepting one were found to have done well and were promoted to higher class. During the year under review there has been a change in the staff. Amir-un-nisa Begum, who has been acting as Head Mistress, was transferred to West Khandesh and Amir Bi Shaikh Usman brought to the school as 1st assistant from Chandore. She is a qualified teacher and has been acting as Head Mistress since the departure of Amir-un-nisa. The number of girls would have been considerably increased but for the fact that there has been one dhamni and it could only bring a limited number of grown up girls to the school. A second dhamni has now been sanctioned by the Government and will probably be placed at the disposal of the school within a few days. The most urgent necessity of this school is the increase in the number of stipends as I have almost daily to refuse applications from candidates desiring entrance into the school as resident students. As I have to send proposals to Government regarding further development of the school I will not mention here in detail its other requirements. I have paid no less than 58 visits to the school during the year under review and a considerable portion of my time is spent in the supervision of the school. As it is against Mahomedan custom to send girls of marriageable age to live in boarding houses, away from the supervision of their parents or guardians, I feel a great responsibility in conducting the institution the more so as I desire to see the experiment a success.

Report of the Inspectress of Urdu Girls' Schools, Central Division, on the Central Urdu Girls' School, Poona, for the year 1915-16.

The Central Urdu Girls' School, Poona, has been under my sole management during the year under review. The total average number on the roll during the year is 79·2 as against 89 of the year 1914-15 and 44 of the year 1913-14. This decrease is due to the prevalence of plague in Poona for 2 or 3 months for which the school had to be temporarily closed under instructions from the Civil Surgeon. Though the average has slightly fallen, the actual number on the rolls in March 1916 has increased to 91 as against 73 of the last year. This number is as much as can be admitted at present with the limited staff of 3 teachers. The number of stipendiary students residing in the school is 9 as against 8 of the last year. Eight of these girls received stipends from Provincial Funds and one from the Belgaum Municipality at whose request she has been admitted. Besides the 9 resident students, there are 7 non-resident stipendiaries who receive Rs. 4 per month. One of the resident students has recently left the school in order to get herself married. The resident students are under Mrs. Amir-ud-din Khan, widow lady of a respectable family. Her management and supervision of the boarding arrangement this year has been excellent. The annual examination of the school took place in November last with the following results :—

Infants.	16 of whom 9 did well.

All the resident students and 6 out of 7 non-resident stipendiaries did well in the examination and they were promoted to the higher class. According to the Government Resolution, Educational Department, No. 1071 of 12th April 1913, the school could only teach upto V standard, but as some of the girls had completed V standard, permission had to be asked to open VI standard in the school. This permission was given by the Director of Public Instruction on condition that no additional expense was to be incurred. This entailed additional work upon the present limited staff without any additional remuneration. The class has been opened and 7 girls are receiving instruction in VI standard. The present acting Head Mistress has done her work fairly well, but she is hardly competent to teach VI standard as she has been trained in Marathi and her Urdu is extremely weak.

But as I have to send proposals to Government with regard to the conversion of the school into a training institution, I refrain here from making further remarks upon the subject of the teaching staff. During the year under review, I had to reject several applications for stipends on account of want of funds. The school is getting more and more popular as it is more and more known. I have no doubt that it will prove a good nucleus for a Urdu Normal Class.

Report of the Inspectress of Urdu Girls' Schools, Central Division, on the Central Urdu Girls' School, Poona, for the year 1916-17.

The Central Urdu Girls' School was under my management during the last year, as it has been during the last 4 years, and I am happy to report that the main object for which it had been established has been realised this year, viz., that the first batch of its pupils has passed the sixth standard and qualified themselves for the teaching profession. The school was formally opened by the Director of Public Instruction in July 1913 with 20 students but it had to be soon closed for plague. It really got a fair start in February 1914 with 4 stipendiaries. I had considerable difficulties at first in persuading respectable Mahomedan parents to send their grown up daughters to live in the premises of the school and prepare themselves for the teacher's profession as there is a great prejudice against the profession among the people. Respectable parents of the lower middle class have no objection to their daughters working with the needle for the whole day at home or making cigarettes or beedies to earn their living but they do not easily consent to their becoming mistresses. This is because mistresses are not generally taken from superior classes, their wages are contemptibly low and their virtue is often open to attack. Purdah has been strictly observed and all religious requirements fully provided in the school. On the 31st of March last the total number of scholars on the roll was 101 against 91 of last year. The school had to be closed for three months, this year, for the plague which affected its attendance. The average attendance this year is 86 as against 79 of the last year. The number of stipendiary students residing in the school was 9. Eight of these receive stipends from Provincial Funds of Rs. 9 per mensem and one from the Municipality of Belgaum. She is admitted by the special permission of the Director of Public Instruction. Besides these there are 7 stipendiaries who receive Rs. 4 per mensem and are allowed to live with their parents. During the year under review one of the resident and one of the non-resident stipendiaries left the school, owing to their continued illness. Their places were filled up by others waiting for admission.

The following is the result of the Annual Examination :—

Standard.	Number appeared.	Number passed.

V	5	3
IV	4	2
III	8	4
II	8	7
I	18	12

There are five resident students in the 6th standard out of whom four passed and one was found slightly deficient in Arithmetic. Amirbi, a trained teacher, continued to be the Head Mistress of the school this year and her work (excepting in Urdu) on the whole has been fairly satisfactory. Aminabi has been throughout the year acting as the first assistant and the school owes much of its success to her diligence and ability. Dhondubai Fakir, who was brought here temporarily from the Sholapur District, acted as second assistant during the year and though a trained teacher her work has been hampered owing to her insufficient knowledge of Urdu.

Of the successful students of the 6th standard it may be remarked that they are girls of good social position. One of them being the daughter of the Kazi of Poona Camp. These girls who are now undergoing training as pupil teachers will shortly leave the school.

During the year under report Government was pleased to sanction one more dhamni for the school which has been already purchased and the result of which is already being felt in the increase of its numerical strength and attendance. Government was also good enough last year to sanction a sewing mistress for the school from next June in their Resolution, Educational Department, No. 2539, dated the 10th October 1916. As there are 7 classes and only three teachers in the school it is heavily understaffed and two more assistants are in demand. Accommodation in the present school building has become insufficient owing to the growth of scholars and of the increasing demands of the boarding house. There are no out-houses for the servants to live in and not enough stables for dhamnis and bullocks. A more spacious building will have soon to be hired. During the period under review Miss Newland, Lady Superintendent, Training College for Women, Poona, kindly paid several visits to the school and was good enough to make many useful suggestions. Miss Chubb, Lady Superintendent, Training College for Women, Ahmedabad, and the Inspectress of Girls' Schools in Sind, also visited the school and favoured it with their kind advice. Among the distinguished purdah ladies that interested themselves in the school and paid it visits from time to time may be mentioned here some of the members of the family of His Highness the Aga Khan and Mrs. Humayun Mirza of Hyderabad, well known for her interest in female education.

GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

Order No. 2852.

Bombay Castle, 8th March 1917.

Memoranda* from the Secretary to the Legislative Council Nos. 861-4 and 1154 dated 24th March and 29th April 1916.

Government memorandum No. 6205 dated 21st June 1916:—

"The undersigned presents compliments to the Commissioner, C. D., and in forwarding a copy of a Resolution† moved by Mr. S. B. Upasani and passed at the meeting of the Legislative Council held in March 1916, is directed to request him to submit, after consulting the heads of offices and departments concerned, a report on the working of the orders in Government Order No. 6598 dated 17th June 1915, directing the introduction of the Balbodh script in all offices of the Central Division and to state whether the orders require any modification."

†"This Council recommends that Government may be pleased to reconsider, in the light of the experience gained during the last few years, the question of the substitution of the Balbodh for the Modi script in official correspondence and records."

Letter from the Commissioner, C. D., No. V.—863 dated 7th September 1916:—

"With reference to Government memorandum No. 6205 dated 21st June 1916, Revenue Department, I have the honour to report that all Collectors in this Division are of opinion that no modification in the orders in Government Order, Revenue Department, No. 6598 dated 17th June 1915, is necessary, and to state that I concur with them. No serious difficulties have occurred in regard to the substitution of Balbodh for Modi. I should think that there can be no doubt that Modi can be written more quickly than Balbodh and that the legibility of Balbodh tends to decrease. Nevertheless Balbodh is likely to remain substantially more legible than Modi, and the difference in rapidity of writing is not in fact causing any serious increase of work or leading to arrears. In these circumstances I think it would be a very great error to go back upon the orders already passed. They should be maintained."

Government memorandum No. 1337, dated 4th February 1916:—

"The undersigned presents compliments to the Commissioner, $\frac{\text{S. D.}}{\text{N. D.}}$, and in inviting his attention to Government Order No. 6598 dated 17th June 1915, sanctioning the introduction of the Balbodh script in all offices of the Central Division, is directed to request him to consider whether that script should not be adopted in the $\frac{\text{Ratnágiri and Kolába District.}}{\text{Thána District.}}$"

Letter from the Commissioner, N. D., No. A.D.M.—79 dated 17th June 1916:—

"With reference to Government memorandum No. 1337 dated 4th February 1916, regarding the introduction of the Balbodh script in the Thána District, I have the honour to state that the officers mentioned below were consulted with the following result:—

1. The Conservator of Forests, Northern Circle. 2. The Collector of Thána. 3. The District Judge, Thána. 4. The Executive Engineer, Thána. 5. The District Superintendent of Police, Thána. 6. The Civil Surgeon, Thána. 7. The Superintendent of Land Records, Northern Division. 8. The Collector of Salt Revenue, Bombay. 9. The Educational Inspector, Northern Division. 10. The Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, Western Registration District. 11. The Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency. 12. The Director of Agriculture, Poona. 13. The Inspector General of Prisons.

"2. Of the thirteen officers consulted the Inspector General of Prisons and the Director of Agriculture state that all the correspondence of their Departments is conducted in English: the Collector of Salt Revenue, Bombay, and the Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Bombay Presidency, state that the Balbodh script has already been adopted in the conduct of all official vernacular correspondence in their

* Not printed.

Departments, while all the remaining officers, except the District Judge, Thána (a copy of whose letter,* together with its accompaniment,* is enclosed) as also all the Heads of the Departments are in favour of the proposed change.

"3. As regards the main objections put forward by the District Judge, Thána, that by adopting in the Balbodh script the horizontal guide line and abbreviations used in the Modi script, the hurriedly written Balbodh becomes more illegible than Modi, I have the honour to observe that the fault is in the writer, not in the script.

"4. A copy of the Collector, Thána's No. M.S.C.—3* dated 10th February 1916 is forwarded herewith; from which it will appear that the substitution of the Balbodh script for Modi is desirable for administrative as well as public convenience, and agreeing with him I have the honour to recommend that the Balbodh script should be substituted for the Modi script in the conduct of all official correspondence and in recording evidence in all public offices and Courts in the Thána District."

Letter from the Commissioner, S. D., No. 2615 dated 13th July 1916:—

"With reference to your expediter No. 6071 dated 17th June 1916, I have the honour to reply that I consider Balbodh should be adopted in Ratnágiri and Kolába as the official script.

"2. I append copies of letters* from Messrs. Brander and Alcock. It will be seen that the latter has been able to introduce Balbodh into Kolába with success, and I see no reason why it should not be adopted in Ratnágiri finally. The fact that Balbodh is said to be illegibly written† in Ratnágiri—a district which has strenuously opposed its introduction—shows either disinclination or incapacity to write legibly. Other districts turn out legible Balbodh.

† See also Mr. Ghosal's letter underlying Government Resolution No. 11719 of the 23rd December 1910.

"3. I do not consider Mr. Brander's letter is convincing. (I presume when he says that 'the introduction of Modi resulted in clearness being lost' he means Balbodh and not Modi). Some of its points appear to me to be special pleading; and the 'fast and legible Modi' he refers to is, in my experience, at least very rare. If the observance of the principles of Government Resolution, Financial Department, No 200 dated 27th January 1886, were insisted on, most, if not all, Modi petitions sent to Government would have to be returned to the senders.

"4. The difficulty of reading Modi was recognised as far back as 1885 (Government Resolution No. 2282 dated 26th December 1885)."

Government memorandum No. 7650 dated 3rd August 1916:—

"Returned to the Commissioner, S. D.

"2. The Commissioner is requested to obtain and furnish to Government the views on the subject of other heads of offices in the several Departments with reference to the Kolába and Ratnágiri Districts only."

Letter from the Commissioner, S. D., No. 4563 dated 12th October 1916:—

"With reference to Government memorandum No. 7650 dated 3rd August 1916 I have the honour to forward the opinions of district officers, on the relative advantages of Balbodh and Modi in the Ratnágiri and Kolába Districts of this Division.

"2. I forward the letters* of the officers consulted. Those in favour of Balbodh or Modi in the Kolába District are as follows:—

Balbodh.	Modi.
Distrct Registrar, Kolába.	Deputy Educational Inspector, Kolába.
District Superintendent of Police, Kolába.
Civil Surgeon, Kolába.
Executive Engineer, Kolába.
District Judge, Thána.
Divisional Forest Officer, Kolába.
Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, Western Registration District.
Superintendent, Post Offices, Konkan.
Collector of Salt Revenue, Bombay

Those in favour of Balbodh or Modi in the Ratnágiri District are as follows:—

Balbodh.	Modi.
Executive Engineer, Ratnágiri.	District Registrar, Ratnágiri.
Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, Central Registration District.	District Superintendent of Police, Ratnágiri.
Superintendent of Post Offices, Konkan.	Civil Snrgeon, Ratnágiri.
Collector, Salt Revenue.	District Judge Ratnágiri.
	Deputy Educational Inspector.

* Printed as accompaniments to this Order.

"3. I enclose Mr. Brander's letter*; I also enclose my letter* to which his is an answer.

"Mr. Brander considers the vernacular work in connection with village administration is very much greater than in above-ghát districts and that size for size the Ratnágiri villages give more work than the above-ghát districts.

"Conditions, however, are similar in Kolába, and there the experiment is proving successful.

"4. All Mr. Brander's arguments were adduced against the introduction of Balbodh in the Central Division. On account of complaint of extra time required, Collectors paid more attention when examining a Mamlatdar's kacheri to the length of correspondences and the method of dealing with them. It is not too much to say that if correspondences are dealt with properly 50 per cent. of the work would be saved. The amount of time and money wasted over trifles such as handing over a broken stick to a complainant after the expiry of the appeal; hunting out a witness to pay him bhatta of a few annas when he should have been paid before he left the Court; selling up land (I know of one case where the Assistant Collector ordered land to be sold as a final order and over 100 subsequent letters passed between the Assistant Collector, Mamlatdar, Circle Inspector and village officers: the correspondence assumed such proportions that the Assistant Collector sent it back to the Mamlatdar to précis the whole); unnecessary correspondence over heirship enquiries, madat suits and the like: in a word the inability of karkuns to decide matters is chiefly responsible for this cry of overworked offices. This waste of time and labour will receive a serious check by the introduction of Balbodh. Moreover, the careless way in which work is often done by karkuns, not merely those in a Mamlatdar's office, is often due to the fact that the officer cannot read easily, and sometimes not at all, the Modi shera. With Balbodh he can see at a glance what he is signing, and it is not proper that an officer should constantly sign what he does not understand, in spite of the English note in pencil attached thereto, often inaccurate.

"5. I cannot admit with Mr. Brander (his paragraph 8) that one or two karkuns write illegible Modi. The idea among more experienced officers is that the majority do. The remedy he proposes is to insist on legible Modi or discharge the karkuns: to use his own words, 'the result of this will be that the Revenue Department will be more shunned in this district than ever'.

"To introduce Balbodh will not mean 'either extra hours for them or growing arrears or scamping the endorsements as resulted when Balbodh was tried here formerly' if the Collector pays due attention to the work. It may at first, but it will lead to shorter endorsements and less bandying about correspondence between offices and less work in consequence. Mr. Brander admits that to read Modi requires some time in practising it, and that reading Balbodh makes reading the vernacular a little easier. The point is therefore which is the more important: that clerks should be allowed to write a difficult hand for the officer to read or a hand the officer can read more easily. Mr. Brander's standpoint seems at fault. All correspondence should be so written that the officer can himself read it easily whether he is examining a talati's dafter, a Mamlatdar's office or watching the disposal of work in his own vernacular office. To deny this is to negative the importance of the Prant Officer or Collector."

Memorandum from the Commissioner, S. D., No. 4851, dated 31st October 1916—Submitting, in continuation of his office No. 4563 dated 12th October 1915, a copy of letter* No. Ref.—306 (General) dated 17th idem from the Inspector General of Registration.

ORDER.—Government accept the opinion expressed by the Commissioner, C. D., that no modification of the orders passed in Government Order No. 6558 dated 17th June 1915 is necessary. A Press Note conveying the decision of Government should be issued with reference to the Resolution on the subject moved by the Hon. Mr. S. B. Upasani and carried at the meeting of the Legislative Council held in March 1916.

2. Government are pleased to direct that in future the Balbodh script should be adopted in lieu of Modi in the conduct of all official correspondence and in recording evidence in all public offices and Courts, including Educational offices, in the Thána, Kolába and Ratnágiri Districts. It should be clearly understood that these orders apply only to the writing done by clerks and other Govern-

To—The Commissioner, N. D.

Sir,

I have the honour to request you to move Government to order the adoption of Balbodh script in place of Modi in this district. Government have directed this change in all districts of Central Division, vide Government Resolution No. 11277 dated 9th December 1912. Thána, the only Marathi-speaking district in Northern Division, is connected closely by language and customs with Deccan, and I do not see why the introduction of the reform should be delayed now that it has been in successful operation in all Deccan districts for the last three years.

2. The reasons why the Modi script should be replaced by Balbodh in this district are even stronger than in case of Deccan. Thána is the only Marathi-speaking district to which Gujarati-knowing Mamlatdars and Deputy Collectors are posted from time to time. All Gujaratis can read and write Balbodh. Three of my present Mamlatdars and the Treasury Officer are natives of Gujarát, and they all advocate the adoption of Balbodh script. Gujarati-knowing Police Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors are often posted to Thána and deciphering of Balbodh will be easier to them than Modi. Again correspondences between this and other districts in Gujarát are not rare in matters of excise and magisterial work, and this inter-communication should naturally be in the universally readable Balbodh than in English as at present. But perhaps the strongest ground why Balbodh should be adopted in this district is that practically the whole coast belt knows and speaks Gujarati almost as well as Marathi, specially in Dáhánu and Umbergaon. The tradesman and shop-keepers are also frequently Gujaratis in these parts.

3. It is true that all the Marathi Mamlatdars of Thána are against the proposed reform, but that is natural. It is also true that clear Balbodh writing takes much more time than Modi, but if the voluminous Modi "Prakrans" come in time to be a bit condensed, it will be no great loss in this heavy district. The greatest drawback to the Balbodh was in Barnishi work, which fell in hopeless confusion in Ratnagiri (vide Government Resolution No. 11719, dated 23rd December 1910). But the Anderson slip system is being introduced in all tálukas in this district, and the introduction of Balbodh as an additional reform will be welcome to the superior inspecting staff of the district. It is true, Mr. Bayly, my late Assistant Collector, was against introducing the reform, but Mr. Bayly has strongly opposed it in Násik, and yet the experiment has been favourably received in that district by all (vide enclosed copy of the Collector of Násik's No. A.D.M.—40 of 2nd October 1915). Mr. Cowan, Assistant Collector in charge Bassein, has no objection, while Khan Bahadur Jacob Bapuji, in charge of Salsette, is whole-heartedly in favour of the reform.

4. This battle of scripts will always go on, but I am respectfully of opinion that having been officially adopted in all Deccan districts, I see no reason in withholding the reform from the only Marathi-speaking district of your Divisions, specially as the reform will tend to bring Thána into closer contact with other districts of Gujarát where the Devnagri or Balbodh script is taught in all primary schools.

I have, etc.,

(Sd.) S. M. BHARUCHA, Collector of Thána.

No. 1014, dated 20th April 1916.

Sir,

With reference to your No. A.D.M.—79, dated 23rd February 1916, I have the honour to state as follows with respect to introducing the Balbodh script in lieu of Modi in official correspondence and recording depositions.

2. I have obtained the opinions of the two Assistant Judges and all the Sub-Judges in the district and of the Bar Association. The latter, Mr. Wassoodew, one of the Assistant Judges, the Inspecting Sub-Judge, and the Sub-Judges of Murbád, Bassein, Mahád, Panvel and Alibág are opposed on principles to the introduction of the Balbodh script. The Second Assistant Judge, the First Class Sub-Judge, Thána, and the Sub-Judges of Kalyán, Dáhánu, Bhiwndi, Pen and Roha are not in favour of introducing the Balbodh script. Though the Sub-Judge of Bassein is opposed on principles and for sound reasons to the introduction of the said script, he has no personal objection to the same.

3. With regard to the comparative value of the respective opinions of the several officers and the Bar Association, I have the honour to make the following remarks. Mr. Wassoodew, the First Assistant Judge, was from his childhood brought up in an English school and the script which may be more familiar to him is Balbodh, and I doubt very much if he came to be acquainted with the Modi script until he assumed the official position as a Deputy Collector. Having regard to his official experience as Deputy Collector and Assistant Judge he is emphatically against the introduction of the Balbodh script. His opinion is therfore of great value. Of the Sub-Judges, who are against the proposal, Mr. Shah is a Gujarati gentleman and Mr. Sanjana is a Parsi. The mother-tongue of both these officers is Gujarati and they knew only the Gujarati characters before they passed their examination in Marathi. The Gujarati characters are more akin to Marathi. These are officers of considerable experience and any prejudice they might originally have in favour of the Balbodh script has been in their cases overcome by their long experience of the Marathi district. Mr. Samant, the Inspecting-Sub-Judge, who had been recently doing inspection work in Khándesh, where the Balbodh script has been long since introduced, and Mr. Kharkar, Sub-Judge of Murbád, who had been for some years a Sub-Judge in that district and has been recently transferred from that district to this, are against the Balbodh script. Their bitter experience of the results of introducing the Balbodh script would make one shudder at the thought of trying that experiment in other places. Their actual knowledge of the facts and my own experience about the Kolába District, where the script has been introduced in official correspondence and recording evidence by officers subordinate to the Collector and District Magistrate, Kolába, amply justify all the inconveniences and the disadvantages anticipated by Mr. F. K. Boyd, District Judge of Násik, in his letter No. 2470, dated 30th September 1914 (accompaniment to Government Order No. 6598, dated 17th June 1915, Revenue Department). In trying criminal cases from Kolába I have to go through the police diaries and other papers and depositions of witnesses which are written in Balbodh, and in some cases I have found them more illegible than the badly written Modi. It cannot be denied that hurriedly written Balbodh is more illegible than Modi, written with the same speed. My experience of Gujarát confirms me in this view. Gujaráti is written on a line drawn without dividing the words and sometimes four or five persons have to put their heads together to decipher some words. From my knowledge of Balbodh script in official matters I can say without fear of contradiction that it is like Modi written on a line drawn without dividing words and has inherited all the vices of the Modi, if they can be so called with worse results. They use the same abbreviations as in Modi. The truth is that when there is a difficulty in reading Modi, it is because the handwritting is bad. The fault is in the writer not in the script. The same can be said of Balbodh. If the Educational Department take good care in improving the handwriting of boys and if the Heads of the Department in making selections for appointments as clerks give preference to good and legible handwriting when all other qualifications are equal, no difficulty is likely to arise. The other cause is imperfect knowledge of the language itself. For your information I annex hereto extracts from the reports of Messrs. Sanjana, Kharkar, Samant and Shah.

4. The Sub-Judges who are in favour of introducing the script do not give any reasoned opinion. Mr. Saldanha's mother-tongue is not Marathi. He is a Manglorian. The First Class Sub-Judge has been most of his service in Kanarese districts and has already committed himself to Mr. Kincaid's view. The Dáhánu Sub-Judge is a Parsi and the Sub-Judges of Pen and Roha are Gujaratis and have no actual experience of the comparative advantages of the Modi and Balbodh scripts. The Sub-Judge of Bhiwndi is a Mahomedan gentleman and he and the Sub-Judge of Kalyán, with others in favour of the scheme, assume that the system is working very satisfactorily in the Central Division.

5. Mr. Kincaid in his rejoinder has tried to answer the objections of Mr. Boyd. But the opinion of the Bar Association of Thána is a clear answer to his arguments. Most of the members of the Bar Association are LL.Bs. They in their infancy had very little acquaintance with Modi, and from their experience of the two scripts in practical life they prefer Modi. I myself am against introducing the script for the aforesaid reasons.

I have the honour to submit that the introduction of Balbodh script in place of Modi for recording evidence would, without serving any useful purpose, entail considerable waste of time to the serious detriment of rapid despatch of work. At a time when delays in disposal of Judicial work is a standing complaint and methods for its acceleration are being invented, this would be rather a retrograde step.

As a matter of fact, an amount of time is taken up to write Balbodh legibly. The general tendency, in order to save time, is to try to write it as fast as Modi, with the result that the handwriting written is very illegible. I have had occasion to read correspondence, depositions and registered documents written in Balbodh, and I have invariably found the writing to be very illegible. If the Balbodh script is introduced, one of two evils must happen—an amount of time will be unnecessarily wasted, or the handwriting will be found to be very illegible.

Since my arrival here (Khándesh) on 24th February last, I have been given work by the Judge of this district, which, if I am permitted to say so, has given me ample opportunity of forming my opinion about the success or failure of the step, that has been already taken here some years ago, of introducing the Balbodh script in place of Modi. The Balbodh script, in which depositions of witnesses are taken down and the official correspondence is carried on in this district, scarcely deserves the name Balbodh ("easy to be read and understood by infants"). Often times, it is so very Dur-Bodha (illegible and unintelligible), and so slovenly written and ugly looking, that one is involuntarily forced to say that the sooner we revert to our good old Modi, the better for all concerned.

That writing deposition in Balbodh will undoubtedly take far more time unless the Shirastedar writing the depositions is quick in grasping what a witness says and has a steady, clear and practised hand to write in Balbodh, the depositions, I am afraid, will be to a great extent illegible and undecipherable, which would keep on the difficulty to get rid of which Balbodh script is proposed.

Sir,

I have the honour to report that the Balbodh script has already been introduced in this district, in all the offices under the Collector's control, since July 1915. It is working with entire satisfaction, gives no extra trouble, and facilitates reading of papers.

No. 1106 dated 4th March 1916.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

With reference to your No. S.R.—376 dated 15th instant, I have the honour to report as follows.

The experiment of substituting Balbodh for Modi was given a thorough trial in 1909 in this district and the substitution proved a failure. I would invite your attention to

Mr. Ghosal's No. 1502 of 25th March 1910, in which he has gone very fully into the pros and cons on each side and given his opinion strongly in favour of restoring Modi again. His opinion is of the more value, as when he came here he was in favour of Balbodh. The introduction of Balbodh in this district resulted in endorsements being shortened, and clearness being lost, so correspondences went to and fro between offices instead of being disposed of. The Balbodh writing of village officers became aften illegible. Arrears in Mamlatdars' offices accumulated and karkuns had to work overtime. Barnishi work especially got into arrears and candidates and talatis had to be called in to bring it up to date. The Balbodh writing proved more undecipherable than Modi. The experiment had a fair trial for a year, but at the end all the Sub-Divisonal Officers and Mamlatdars were strong in condemning it, not on a priori grounds, but after a long practical trial. Great weight, too, should be given to the opinion of an experienced and practical Collector like Mr. Ghosal.

The sole argument in favour of Balbodh is that if written well in printed style it is quicker to read than Modi. But this condition is found in practice impossible to attain, having regard to practical necessities of prompt disposal of much business as in the Revenue Department with a limited staff and not compelling that staff to work unreasonable hours.

None of the objections to Modi usually made seem to me to have much force. A European officer or an Indian officer whose language is not Marathi can very soon learn Modi well enough to be able to follow with his eye petitions and endorsements on it when received by his karkun. He can also safeguard himself against wrong Marathi endorsements by having an English summary in ink written on the side and initialled by the karkun. Most officers nowadays have so much English work that they have no time to read their vernacular papers word by word. Even where Balbodh is substituted and is easier read, I do not think officers will read it more than the former Modi. It comes to this then that for the sake of one or two officers here and there who, owing to light work or a penchant for reading their vernacular correspondence in detail, wish to have their reading of vernacular manuscript made specially easy for them, the whole vernacular clerical work of the Presidency would be made to give up the ordinary cursive hand of business and use a slow hand printing style.

The case seems to me exactly the same as if, because in England some clerks do write a bad running hand, Government there should order that all writing was to be henceforth in capital letters, for Balbodh is nothing more than a system of writing in capitals.

The difficulty in reading Modi, experienced by one new to it, is in my opinion more due to the unfamiliar words and subject-matter than to the handwriting. When once a European officer gets familiar with the subject-matter of his vernacular correspondence and practises reading it, he can soon acquire facility in reading it quick enough for all practical purposes.

With regard to the objection that Modi is often very illegible, I find this does not occur often. Sufficient vernacular knowing karkuns writing a fair hand are obtainable in plenty and bad writers need not be employed.

The fatal objection to Balbodh for business purposes is that it is not a cursive hand and was never meant to be such. The strain on hand and brain forming detached letters is considerable and tiring. It is no argument in its favour, for Government use to say that Maratha ladies use it in correspondence. I should imagine they do not correspond much and have plenty of leisure.

If Balbodh be adopted, the result in time will be that some karkuns will have to be employed or reductions of establishment that are sometimes found possible will be impossible. Either way, greater expense to Government will result if the staff is not increased, revenue service will become unpopular owing to the increase of working hours necessitated by Balbodh.

It is in magisterial work that the disadvantages of Balbodh are so serious and irksome. The depositions have to be taken very slowly, so that they may be recorded in Balbodh and thus the time of the Magistrate who when a revenue officer has many other duties is wasted, as also that of his clerks and the parties to the case. In Poona my experience as Sub-Divisional Magistrate was that Balbodh doubled the work as the clerks recorded the evidence in Modi and thereafter made Balbodh copies of it so as to have the official record in Balbodh. I had too much to do to slow down the case so as to permit recording in Balbodh. Practice no doubt improves the pace of writing Balbodh, but it can never be written at anything like the speed at which a fast yet legible Modi hand can be written.

Finally Modi is the natural evolved cursive hand of Marathi for official and business purposes. It is an artistic and pretty handwriting when ordinarily well written and not hard to read with a little practice. It has been found eminently suitable for official purposes and no one found any fault with it before Mr. Kincaid. On perusing the opinions printed with Government Resolution No. 6598 of 17th June 1915, it will be seen that many experienced Revenue and Police officers strongly prefer Modi. Many officers who favour Balbodh have offices where the vernacular work is probably lighter and more leisurely than in revenue offices. In these circumstances I am very strongly of opinion that Modi should continue to be and venture to predict that if Balbodh were again introduced in this district, the efficiency of the administration will seriously deteriorate.

Sir,

With reference to your No. 3119 dated 11th instant, I have the honour to state that I would advocate the introduction of Balbodh script, as being more legible and consequently less liable to be misread, in lieu of Modi script in all the offices under my control in this district. At present all correspondence in my office is carried on in English; but in the sub-divisional offices. some of the correspondence carried on with the karkuns and maistries, who do not understand English, is conducted partly in Balbodh and partly in Modi script.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

In reply to your memorandum No. 3119 dated 11th August 1916, requesting my opinion on the question of the introduction of Balbodh script in all offices in Kolába District in lieu of the Modi script, I have the honour to forward herewith a copy of my predecessor Mr. Dikshit's opinion on the subject contained in his letter No. 1014* dated 20th April 1916, to the Commissioner, N. D. Although he is against the introduction of the Balbhodh script I personally differ from him. To a man whose mother-tongue is not Marathi and who is not thoroughly well-versed in Modi script, the Modi script is more difficult to deciper than Gujarati script is to a man whose mother-tongue is other than Gujarati. With every respect to Mr. Dikshit's opinion, I cannot but observe that a man well-versed in Modi script and whose mother-tongue is Marathi (as Mr. Dikshit is) may find no difficulty in deciphering the Modi script, and that to such a man, the slovenly written Balbodh may appear more ugly and illegible; but to a man not so much trained to that script and whose mother-tongue is not Marathi, the Balbodh is far superior and easy in the practical despatch of work The difficulty which a man of the latter type feels and the waste of time that he has to make in trying to make out the meaning cannot be gauged by a man of the former type. Moreover, there is a sort of conservatism and sentiment in trying to stick to one's own script, however difficult it may be to others. I am therefore decidedly in favour of the introduction of Balboth script in all offices in the Kolába District.

Sir,

With reference to your No. 3120 dated 11th August 1916, I have the honour to state that out of 100 vaccinators in Western Registration District, 60 vaccinators in East Khándesh, West Khándesh and Násik Districts have adopted the Balbodh script, and out of 8 Inspectors of Sanitation and Vaccination, 5 have adopted the script. There are 17 vaccinators including two Janjira State vaccinators and one Inspector in Kolába District, and I am of opinion that Balbodh script may be introduced in the Kolába District without difficulty. The introduction of Balbodh script has worked with satisfactory results in East and West Khándesh and Násik Districts, and it can be introduced in the Kolába District with the same results.

C. R. No. 3162 dated 4th September 1916.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

In reply to your memorandum No. 3451 dated the 26th ultimo, I have the honour to state that I am of opinion that the reasons given by Mr. Kincaid in his letter No. 1445 dated the 1st October 1914, printed as accompaniment to Government Resolution, Revenue Department, No. 6598 dated the 17th June 1915 are conclusive. It is true that Balbodh cannot be written quite as fast as Modi, though if the Government orders regarding the writing of each word separately are strictly carried out, the difference in speed is very slight. On the other hand, even badly written Balbodh is easier to read than badly written Modi. The amount of official correspondence conducted in English increases every year, and before very long there will probably be little official correspondence in the vernacular except between taluka and village officers.

2. I ought to add that I have for the last four and half years been in charge of an office in which there is hardly any vernacular correspondence and have consequently had little practical experience of the effect of the orders substituting Balbodh for Modi.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

With reference to your No. 3119 dated the 11th August 1916, I have the honour to state that in the face of strong opinion in favour of the introduction of Balbodh script in all correspondence, I submit I am unable to hold up Modi script for its adoption in correspondence. But this step I am afraid is likely to relegate Modi script to a place amongst ancient curiosities, and I submit the fate of Modi script might be referred to some connoisseurs. I should rather not do away with Modi script as a means of correspondence and allow Balbodh to usurp its place so far as this office is concerned on some of the following grounds:—

1. The introduction of Modi script in former times marks a phase of psychological development of the art of writing.

2. It affords facilities for fast writing and if legibility and adherence to a few approved patterns are enforced, it will no doubt induce dexterity of figures for purposes of drawing and other allied arts.

3. Balbodh if it has to compete Modi script in its facility for fast writing may some day be transformed into some kind of Modi.

No. 2616 dated 13th July 1916.

To—The Collector of Ratágiri.

Sir,

I have the honour to forward copy of my letter No. 2615 dated 13th July 1916 to Government on the question of adoption of Balbodh in your district and to invite your attention to Government Order No. 6598 dated 17th June 1915, in which the results of the innovation in several districts are given.

2. The introduction of Balbodh has proved remarkably successful in other districts. It is stated that Balbodh is badly written in Ratnágiri. I encountered a great deal of opposition in introducing it into Sholápur, as is natural with an innovation of this nature, but once the karkuns found they had to stick to Balbodh, their writing improved both in facility and speed fairly soon. I trust this will be the case in Ratnágiri, and if it is not, should Government be pleased to order the adoption of Balbodh, the extra trouble and labour of karkuns having to work longer hours will be well worth the inevitable result.

3. It was not, as you state, Mr. Kincaid who first felt the difficulty. He was the first to find a remedy. The difficulty was felt as far back as 1885 (Government Resolution No. 2282 dated 26th December 1885) at any rate.

4. In spite of efforts we have not been able to improve Modi. It seems to get worse and more illegible, and I believe with Mr. Fellowes that it is easier to exact a good standard of Balbodh script than of Modi script. Certainly our kulkarnis and sub-registrars have mastered the difficulty of fairly rapid writing in legible Balbodh as well as Mr. Kincaid's section-writers.

5. Fast writing makes slow reading and after all letters and correspondence are meant to be read by the officers to whom they are sent, if it should be necessary as it often is. As regards the slowness in recording depositions in Balbodh, if depositions were recorded more slowly, our Appellate Courts would have less work to do; apart from the fact that in trying appeals the Court wants to have a vernacular record it can read with ease itself. Speed is not everything. Moreover, it would give the Lower Court time to record evidence in legible English, and thereby save the Appellate Court a great deal of time and labour.

6. I cannot quite accept the view that many officers who favour Balbodh have light vernacular work, and the letters underlying in Government Resolution No. 6598 dated 17th June 1915 bear out my opinion. Karkuns do not like Balbodh; and most district officers do; and while I understand your reluctance to introduce Balbodh, I really believe it could be introduced into Ratnágiri with satisfactory results. In the hope of possibly inducing you to modify your views I have ventured to put mine before you.

I have, etc.,

Acting Commissioner, S. D.

No. 4889 dated 3rd September 1916.

To,—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

With reference to the last sentence of your No. 2616 dated 13th July 1916, I have the honour to state that I have again carefully considered the matter and gone through the former correspondence on the subject.

2. The result, however, only confirms my opinion that Balbodh script is unsuitable for the conditions of this district, and if introduced will very seriously affect the efficiency of the administration. In the hope of averting such a result, I would bring to your notice the following considerations.

3. There is indeed a divergence of opinion on Balbodh versus Modi in the correspondence printed with Government Resolution No. 6598 of 17th June 1915, Revenue Department. Many officers favour Balbodh; but many experienced officers, including Judicial, Forest and Police, are strongly against Balbodh. The clue to this divergence is, I think, probably the following. Legible Balbodh takes on an average about 1½ times longer to write than Modi. and that too after much practice, besides involving greater strain and effort in writing the disjointed letters. Where the volume of office work was not great in proportion to an office staff, the staff would be able to cope with the excess work and time involved by Balbodh, but where the vernacular work in proportion to the hands was full or heavy, the additional work involved by Balbodh would be felt very burdensome. But this is equivalent to saying that many offices could do with fewer hands, which I believe is often the case. Hence the fact that in many offices it has been possible to substitute Balbodh does not prove that it can be done with good results where the work is heavy and the offices not overmanned.

4. Having acted Collector in this district now for two considerable periods, my experience is that the volume of vernacular work in connection with village administration is very much greater than in above-ghát districts. Owing to minute sub-division and constant transfers of land and large village areas, the record of rights and village accounts give exceedingly heavy work, which the talatis are barely able to cope with. Indeed the record of rights is in a very imperfect condition. In a village of similar size above-ghats as I can personally testify, the revenue accounts and record of rights work would give only a fraction of the work they would in a Ratnágiri village. In the former, holdings are large, and transfers comparatively few, so mutations are few, and accounts of small bulk. The Ratnágiri four revenue instalments as against two above-ghats much increase the work. If on the top of their existing very heavy work, talatis are required to use Balbodh, and increase their time spent on writing by nearly one-half, their work will fall into arrears, and they will simply leave much of the record of rights work undone, so its quality will seriously deteriorate. Besides this, Mamlatdars and their staffs will be much harassed by trying to exact the extra work from the talatis.

5. The vatap or partition work peculiar to this district involves an immense amount of vernacular writing. This work is already two years in arrears, and Balbodh will make matters much worse.

6. In your second paragraph you refer to the fact that the karkuns may have to work longer hours with Balbodh. Owing to revenue offices having harder work than other offices as a rule, and other reasons, the Revenue Department is having everywhere great difficulty in securing good recruits. I therefore submit that we cannot impose longer hours on the karkuns with impunity. The result will be that the Revenue Department will be more shunned in this district than ever, and we shall obtain only very inferior men, whereas the department should secure the best men, as it touches the life of the people so closely. Further, most of existing staff have already a full day's work, and Balbodh will mean either extra hours for them or growing arrears or scamping the endorsements as resulted when Balbodh was tried here formerly.

7. I would further point out that my opinion as to the unsuitability of Balbodh for this district especially is not founded on theoretic reasons. Balbodh was tried here for a full year under Mr. A. F. Maconochie, who was keen on it. Mr. Ghosal, his successor, was also keen on it, until practical experience convinced him of its unsuitability. I have examined some of the Balbodh writing of that time. It is much more illegible than Modi. I do not dispute that if written slowly Balbodh can be written legibly, but the point is that the volume of work here is so much that karkuns have not got the time to write slower than they do now. If the average Modi written here were illegible or slow to read, there would be some case for a different hand. But the Modi written here is, I find, good on the whole, and easily read by those who have to read it. Neither the public nor officials find any fault in it. The two European officials in the district who may need at any time to read Modi could easily read it fluently if they gave some time to practising it. Introducing Balbodh would mean that merely to make the reading of vernacular a little easier for them, the labour of hundreds of karkuns, talatis and others will be greatly increased and official correspondence fall into arrears.

8. It is true that some karkuns do not write good Modi. But their Balbodh will be equally bad. It does not seem necessary to condemn all Modi writers, because one here and there is a bad writer. The remedy is to insist on his writing Modi carefully or failing compliance to discharge him, also to enlist only recruits who write a good hand.

9. I would again solicit attention to paragraph 2 of Mr. Ghosal's No. 1502 of 24th March 1910 printed in Government Resolution No. 11719 of 23rd December 1910, Revenue Department. After a full year of the experiment, he found that Balbodh endorsements were cut short, so correspondences went to and fro, undisposed of, endorsements had often to be got rewritten, village officers' Balbodh entries were often undecipherable even by Circle Inspectors, arrears in Mamlatdars' offices increased. Correspondences were delayed in despatch and talatis and candidates had to be called in by Mamlatdars to clear off the work. None of these facts have ever been controverted. They cannot, it seems to me, be overlooked. Continuing, Modi is the only way to prevent a reoccurrence of the muddle that occurred.

10. The then Commissioner, Mr. Gibb, agreed that the experiment was a failure and allowed, Government approving, reintroduction of Modi.

11. It is stated that Balbodh has lately been introduced into Alibág with success. I do not know if Alibág conditions are like those of Ratnágiri, but it may be noted that it takes a considerable time; in this district it took a year before the full results of Balbodh were known.

12. Balbodh was tried in the Judicial Department in this district and proved as much a failure there as in the Revenue, being illegible, and making depositions and process work very much slower and wasting the time of the court. I understand the present District Judge has reported against the reintroduction of Balbodh. With reference to your paragraph 5, no difficulty or delay is experienced in the appellate courts of this district, including that of the Sessions Judge, from the depositions in the lower courts being recorded in Modi. It is important to keep Balbodh out of judicial work as it lends itself peculiarly to forgery and interpolation.

13. Balbodh was also tried in the Registration Department in this district and found unsatisfactory. Its continuance would have necessitated a large increase in the clerical establishment.

14. Great weight should, I consider, be given to the fact that after prolonged experiment here all the Mamlatdars, the Sub-Divisional Officers and finally the then Collector found the administration seriously impaired in efficiency by Balbodh and condemned it. The great majority of Indian Marathi officers, so far as I know, hold the same opinion.

15. I am firmly convinced that any reintroduction of Balbodh, even as an experiment, is bound to result as before in serious deterioration of the efficiency of the district administration, besides harassing and overworking the revenue and other subordinates who, as it is, have hard work to keep things up to the mark. No local complaint about, or dissatisfaction with, Modi has been made, so there is no reason to put the severe handicap of a Balbodh script upon the administration, which is working efficiently with Modi. As the officer directly responsible for the efficient administration of the district I feel it my duty to represent what will be the result of introducing Balbodh, and request that you will kindly bring my views to the notice of Government.

I have, etc.,

No. 144 dated 3rd September 1916.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

With reference to your memorandum No. 3119 dated 11th August 1916, I have the honour to report as follows. The substitution of Balbodh for Modi was tried in 1909 in the office of the Sub-Registrar, Ratnágiri. It was found to be a much slower process than Modi, and that its general introduction would necessitate an extra copying clerk being given to each Sub-Registrar, i. e., the clerical establishment would have to be doubled, otherwise heavy arrears would accumulate.

2. Other practical inconveniences were also foreseen. The public as a rule write their documents in Modi. In Modi some letter forms, e. g, those for kä and lä, and those for jä and nä, are not unlike each other. Which letter is meant is easily ascertained from reading the whole word or context. But a karkún is sometimes careless or busy and in copying a Modi document in Balbodh either when registering it, or in giving a certified copy, might easily write kä for lä or vice versa without troubling to study the meaning of the word or sentence. Thus confusion would arise. If he made such a mistake, in giving a Modi copy of a Modi document, it would be easily detected. In making or giving copies it is important that the exact words be reproduced. When Modi had been copied in Balbodh, it would not be easy to trace such an error as the above. Nor could the public be compelled to write documents in Balbodh, which is a style little used by them.

3. No objection has been made to or inconvenience found here in the writing or reading of Modi. Registration clerks make Modi copies carefully and legibly. It would in my opinion cripple the efficient despatch of copying work greatly if Balbodh were introduced, and the public and clerical staff would be much inconvenienced by the delay thereby caused. Also increased clerical establishment would be required.

I have, etc.,

J. P. BRANDER,
District Registrar of Ratnágiri.

No. 2548 dated 23rd August 1916.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

With reference to your No. 3119 dated the 11th instant, I have the honour to invite a reference to letter No. 1502 dated 24th March 1910 from the Collector of Ratnágiri, printed in the preamble of Government Resolution, Revenue Department, No. 11719 dated 23rd December 1910, and to report that for the reasons explained therein I am not in favour of the introduction of the Balbodh script.

I have, etc.,

E. P. WHITE,
District Superintendent of Police, Ratnágiri.

No. 2702 dated 5th September 1916.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

With reference to your letter No. 3503 dated the 30th ultimo, I have the honour to report that Balbodh script was tried in this office for about a year but, it having proved a failure, orders were issued by your office for the introduction of Modi.

2. Personally I am not in favour of the introduction of the Balbodh script, chiefly because when written hastily it is harder to decipher than Modi.

I have, etc.,

E. P. WHITE,
District Superintendent of Police, Ratnágiri.

No. 1484 dated 16th August 1916.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

Referring to your No. 3119 dated the 11th August 1916, I have the honour to state that, in my opinion, it is not desirable to introduce Balbodh script in lieu of Modi. There are certainly some advantages in favour of the changes, but the disadvantages outweigh the advantages. The principal objection is that if Balbodh is to be written in a legible way, it would take about double the time required for writing Modi.

2. I beg to add that, so far as the Medical Department is concerned, the correspondence carried on in the vernacular is negligible. Even when communications are received in the vernacular, the replies are generally sent in English.

I have, etc.,

D. E. KOTHAWALA,
Civil Surgeon, Ratnágiri.

No. 1848 dated 23rd August 1916.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

In answer to your memorandum No. 3119 of the 11th instant, I have the honour to state that no advantage would be gained by the substitution of the Balbodh script for the Modi. Modi can be written legibly, and if care is taken to appoint men writing a good hand and to impress on karkuns, after appointment, the necessity for writing clearly, there is no reason why correspondence in Modi should be illegible. The Modi script possesses the great advantage over the Balbodh, that it can naturally be written faster. All the clerical members of the judicial establishment are used to writing Modi. Probably hardly any could write the other script with ease.

2. I agree generally with the observations of Mr. Ghosal in his letter, printed in Government Resolution, Revenue Department, No. 11719 of 23rd December 1910. I am informed that, when Balbodh was tried in this district, depositions were written so badly as to be illegible. I am also told that in another district, in which Balbodh was in use partially in several courts, it was used only for some purposes, but much of the work continued to be done in Modi.

3. The use of the Balbodh script would render the work of recording depositions in the courts and of the preparation of the numerous processes which have to issue in suits and other proceedings considerably slower than it is at present, and that would be a great evil. Judges generally read the English notes of evidence. It is occasionally necessary to refer to the vernacular statements and there is no great inconvenience caused by these being in Modi. The difficulty sometimes felt in reading them would not be diminished, if the deposition were taken with equal rapidity in Balbodh, and I seriously doubt if the Judge's work would be at all facilitated in this respect by the suggested change. The papers which it is most frequently necessary to refer to in cases to be decided by Judges are deeds which are generally in Modi, and would probably continue to be in Modi even if Balbodh were adopted as the Court script.

4. I do not therefore recommend Modi being given up for Balbodh.

I have, etc.,

M. B. TYABJI,
ict Judge, Ratnágiri.

No. 1151 dated 15th August 1916.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

With reference to your No. 3119 of 11th August 1916, I have the honour to state that the clerical staff in my office is inadequate to cope with the heavy work in this district. At present there are five clerks under me, while this is a district requiring at least two more clerks. Government have been pleased to recognise the necessity of appointing two more clerks for this district in Government Resolution, Educational Department, No. 3676 of 21st

November 1914. However, these clerks cannot be appointed till the financial situation improves. Besides my clerks are not accustomed to write Balbodh script with as much ease as they can write the Modi script. In these circumstances I respectfully beg to submit that the Balbodh script should not be introduced in this office in lieu of Mody script. Generally I am to correspond with teachers. Most of them write Modi script very neatly as they have to teach the subject in schools. I, therefore, think that it is not desirable to ask them to introduce Balbodh script in lieu of Modi, in official correspondence.

I have, etc.,

D. V. GANGAL,

Acting Deputy Educational Inspector, Ratnágiri.

No. 6024 dated 26th August 1916.

Forwarded with compliments. Undersigned agrees with the Deputy Educational Inspector. There is no need of introducing Balbodh script in the office of the Deputy Educational Inspector, Ratnágiri.

A. J. BANGI,

for Acting Educational Inspector, S. D.

Ref. No. 306-General dated 17th October 1916.

To—The Commissioner, S. D.

Sir,

I have the honour of informing you that the only district which has not adopted Balbodh in this Department is Ratnágiri. Experience has borne out the fact that Balbodh has nothing against it except the longer time taken in writing, but I would invite your attention in that respect to the opinion of my predecessor, Mr. Seddon, conveyed in his letter on the subject (vide reference No. 1997-Genl. dated 9th October 1914 printed on page 6 of the accompaniments to Government Resolution, Revenue Department, No. 6598 dated 17th June 1915) with which I agree. Balbodh written carelessly, hurriedly and badly can become as illegible as any other writing in the same circumstances; but Balbodh written moderately well is much more legible and takes a little longer than Modi: nothing like so much longer as the exaggerated estimate of the District Registrar, Ratnágiri. We have the experience of about twelve districts against his estimate.

Yours, etc.,

(Sd.) F. G. H. ANDERSON,

Inspector General of Registration,

Bombay Presidency.

NOTE 1.—The non-recurring expenditure shown in column 7 is inflated by the following items, which are covered by special receipts :—

3,97	for expenditure on education.	met from the grants made for the purpose from Imperial revenues.
77	for the Commemoration Building at the Apollo Bandar, Bombay.
1,50	for expenditure for the direct benefit of the agricultural classes out of the profits from the wheat scheme.
6,24	Total.

The balance of non-recurring expenditure which is met from ordinary revenues amounts to 57,70 (including 1,74 for charges due to the war).

NOTE 2.—Column 5 represents the minimum expenditure on account of items (like temporary establishments, plague allowance, contingencies, and supplies and services) for which provision has to be made every year, but of which the amount varies from year to year. The lowest figure in the "Budget Estimates, 1917-18," "Revised Estimates, 1916-17," "Budget Estimates, 1916-17," and "Accounts, 1915-16," has generally been taken as the minimum recurring charge for each item, and the total of all such items is entered under column 5 against the major head concerned. The difference between the total budget provision for such items and the minimum recurring charge entered in column 5 is taken as non-recurring, and this, together with the provision for purely temporary objects, has been classed as non-recurring and entered in column 7. This method is adopted in the case of all major heads, except 29, Superannuation Allowances and Pensions, 42, Irrigation—Major Works, 43, Irrigation—Minor Works (Public Works Department), and 45, Civil Works (Public Works Department). In the case of 29, Superannuation Allowances and Pensions, the provisions for gratuities and refunds are classed as fluctuating recurring, while all other items are treated as permanent recurring. The whole provision under 42, Irrigation—Major Works—Interest on Debt is classed as permanent recurring. Under the heads 42, Irrigation—Major Works—Working Expenses and 43, Irrigation—Minor Works (Public Works Department) the provision on account of ordinary repairs, establishments and tools and plant is classed as permanent recurring, the provision for special repairs and the minimum provision considered absolutely necessary for works in progress, new works, discretionary grants and reserve is classed as fluctuating recurring, and the balance is classed as non-recurring. Under the head 45, Civil Works (Public Works Department), the provision on account of repairs, establishments, and tools and plant is classed as permanent recurring, the minimum provision considered absolutely necessary for works in progress, new works, discretionary grants and reserve is classed as fluctuating recurring, and the balance is classed as non-recurring.

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON BILL NO. VI OF 1916.

We, the members of the Select Committee appointed to consider and report on the Bill further to amend the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, and the Bombay Local Boards Act, 1884 (Bill No. VI of 1916), have the honour to report as follows:—

1. The new section 22A which the Bill inserts in the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, refers to sub-section (4) of section 22 for the necessary definition of "corrupt practice." The definition in question was framed for the purpose of the enquiry held by the judge into a disputed election and not with a view to criminal proceedings such as are now contemplated by this Bill. We are of opinion that the paragraph contained in section 22 (4) after clause (ii) ("and a corrupt practice. . . . . election"), which defines the conditions under which a candidate is responsible for the acts of his agent, is somewhat too extended in scope for a criminal enactment. We propose therefore to do away with the reference to section 22 (4) and to incorporate the description of "corrupt practice" in section 22A (1) itself. In framing this definition we have taken the words "directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf" from section 2 of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854 (17 and 18 Vict., c. 102); otherwise the wording is the same as in section 22 (4).

2. In sub-section (2) of new section 22A we have altered "any gratification whatever" to "any money or valuable consideration or any individual profit" for the sake of uniformity with section 22 (4), and an explanation of "individual profit" has been inserted below sub-section (4), as it appears desirable that the section should be self-contained.

3. In sub-section (4) of section 25A words have been entered with a view to preventing criminal offences under this section, which will always be of considerable local importance, from being tried summarily (see section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898). Although it is improbable that magistrates would ordinarily apply the summary procedure to such cases, for which we consider it is unsuitable in this country, we are of opinion that the requisite provision should be enacted in the Act.

4. By an alteration of sub-section (5) of section 22A, we have provided that the sanction of the judge (which is a necessary preliminary to criminal proceedings under the section) can be granted only when he has held an election enquiry under section 22. This alteration is important as it prevents criminal proceedings being taken unless the validity of the election has been called in question in the manner described in section 22, but we recommend that it be adopted. The district judge will not be in a position to know any of the circumstances of the election unless the matter has come before him under section 22, and there does not appear sufficient justification for requiring him to hold the independent preliminary enquiry which would in that case be necessary for the purpose of sanction: the district judge's duties do not ordinarily extend to criminal matters which do not arise out of civil proceedings. We doubt whether occasions for criminal proceedings are likely to occur in cases where no inquiry is held under section 22, and on the other hand we fear that, under the section as originally drafted, undue facility will be given to vexatious complaints.

5. By sub-clause (6) we have laid down a time limit for prosecutions: the period is the same as that fixed by section 161, but there may be a doubt as to the applicability of the proviso in that section.

6. Sub-section (7) grants an appeal to the court of session, whether the sentence imposed by the magistrate exceeds Rs. 50 or not (see sections 408 and 413 of the Code of Criminal Procedure). We have added this provision as we think it desirable that there should always be an appeal in these proceedings, which will be of equal local importance whether the higher or lower penalty be imposed.

7. Clause 3.—In the Bill as published the same criminal provisions were inserted in the Bombay Local Boards Act, 1884, as were inserted in the Municipal Act. The Local Boards Act, however, differs from the Municipal Act in that it takes no notice of corrupt practices. We are strongly of opinion that the provisions of the Local Boards Act relating to the ordinary enquiry by the judge should be brought into line with the Municipal Act at the same time as the criminal provisions are added. We are conscious that in so doing we run the risk of exceeding the duty laid upon us by the Council of criticising the Bill referred to us, but we submit that, if our amendment of section 22A (5) of the Municipal Act (by which we have restricted the initiation of the criminal proceedings to cases where an enquiry has been undertaken by the judge) is accepted, a similar restriction should be made in the Local Boards Act, in which case the assimilation of section 25 of the Local Boards Act to section 22 of the Municipal Act becomes inevitable, for the enquiry contemplated by section 25 of the Local Boards Act, in its present form, makes no reference to corrupt practices and it would be a mere accident if an enquiry were held in an election which had been vitiated by corrupt practices. For these reasons we have revised section 25 on the lines of section 22 of the Municipal Act.

8. Clause 4 is similar to revised clause 2.

9. Clause 5 embodies certain consequential amendments rendered necessary by the other clauses of the Bill.

10. We think it is desirable that the Public Prosecutor, or someone on his behalf, should attend enquiries under section 22 of the Municipal Act, and section 25 of the Local Boards Act (in the same manner as the Director of Public Prosecutions attends municipal election enquiries in England (47 and 48 Vict., c. 70, s. 28)), for we think he should watch the proceedings with a view to taking steps for a criminal prosecution in cases where the proceedings in the enquiry indicate that corrupt practices have been committed; it appears unnecessary to make any reference to this subject in the law, but we would suggest that the question of making a rule for the purpose in the Rules for the conduct of the Legal Affairs of Government may be considered.

Minute of Dissent by the Honourable Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas.

I sign the report minus the last para. which in my opinion does not fall within the scope of the report of a Select Committee but should be made subject of executive order. A Select Committee's report is concerned with the provisions recommended to be passed into law and not the machinery through which the working of the Act may be facilitated.

To

THE SECRETARY TO GOVERNMENT,

Sir,

I am desired by my Committee to confirm a telegram to His Excellency the Governor on the 2nd instant, the text of which was as follows :—

Text.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR,
Poona.

"Grain Merchants' Association strongly supports the clause three of the Bill amending Medical Registration Act, 1912, intended to be introduced by Honourable Mr. Patel in the next Session of the Legislative Council."

Chairman.

To make the text clearer I am desired by my Committee to request you to put the following before His Excellency the Governor in Council and my Committee trust the same will meet with due consideration.

The attention of my Committee was drawn long ago towards the controversy that took place over the Bombay Medical Registration Act, 1912, and they very much regretted that the Medical Council proposed to give an inconsistent and strange meaning to the phrase "Infamous conduct in any professional respect," by considering any act of associating with Ayurvedic, Unani and other indigenous system of medicine or with any School or College teaching these systems as such infamous conduct on the part of those who are on the register. Such attempt simply means putting a stop to the progress of the Ayurvedic and Unani systems of medicine at the hands of those who have systematically studied the subject by western methods and are therefore better qualified to develop the ancient science of medicine of their mother land which is gradually deteriorating in the hands of unskilled persons. My Committee is perfectly sure that this was not the motive of the Government in enacting the said Medical Registration Act 1912.

My Committee is glad to learn that the Honourable Mr. Patel is going to introduce a Bill in the ensuing session of the Legislative Council to amend the said Act by adding an explanation to section 7 of the said Act and thereby to prevent the mischief likely to be created by the interpretation proposed to be put by the Medical Council on the phrase "Infamous conduct in any professional respect," and it fully appreciates the said Bill and urges upon His Excellency to lend his full support.

Sir,

BOMBAY MEDICAL UNION,

WADIA BUILDING,

No. 123, Esplanade Road, Fort,

Bombay, 11th July 1917.

To

THE SECRETARY TO THE COUNCIL OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY FOR MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS.

Re A Bill further to amend the Bombay Act No. VI of 1912 as amended by Bombay Acts Nos. IV of 1912 and III & IV of 1916.

Sir,

I am directed by the Bombay Medical Union to submit for favour of consideration by the Legislative Council of His Excellency the Governor, the following representation in regard to the above Bill that is to be introduced at the next meeting of the Council by the Honourable Mr. V. J. Patel.

Re Sub-Section I of Section II of the proposed amendment.

(a) The Union begs to submit that the reduction in the number of nominated members of the Council from six to four as proposed is very desirable and in consonance with the trend of public opinion in India.

(b) At the time of initiating the Medical Registration Act the number of nominated members on the Council was larger than that of the elected members. If the revision of its constitution is deemed to be necessary it should be done by increasing the number of elected members.

Re Sub-Section II of Section II of the proposed amendment.

The Union begs to differ from the Honourable member's views in regard to the representation of the Medical Faculty of the Senate of the Bombay University. The Faculty is already more than sufficiently represented on the Council, inasmuch as of thirteen members constituting it, at least ten are members of the Faculty.

The Union therefore begs to suggest that the present number of members returned by the Graduates of the Bombay University be increased to six, and further that the Graduates should be empowered to elect them from their own body. The Union therefore begs to submit that the following alterations be made in the Sections concerned: in clause (b) of sub-clause 2 of Section 2 of the Act, instead of the word "six" the word "four" be inserted: in clause (c) of the same sub-section the word "six" be substituted for the word "four" and the words "from amongst their own body" be added after the word "elected."

Re Sub-Section III of Section II of the proposed amendment.

The Union objects strongly to the inclusion of the Sub-Assistant Surgeons and Military Assistant Surgeons in the Council at present on the following grounds:

(a) The Medical Council is a Judicial as well as a punitive body. As such many intricate questions and cases come before the Council for their judgment, decision and punishment. The punishment inflicted by the Council at times is extremely severe, viz., removal of the name of a Medical man from the Register and thus in addition to the disgrace attached to it, depriving him of the means of livelihood. Some of the cases are so intricate that even lawyers of eminence and Judges express different opinions on them. The punishment inflicted by the Council is irrevocable.

It will be readily admitted that only men of good education and eminent professional status must be elected to a body discharging such responsible functions.

It cannot be contended that the Military Assistant Surgeons and Sub-Assistant Surgeons can be included in the above category. Their preliminary education does not come upto the lowest standard of education entitling them to commence Medical studies as registered Medical students as required by the General Medical Council of Great Britain and Ireland and they are not admitted on the "Register" of the General Medical Council of Great Britain and Ireland as their courses of Medical studies fall short of the lowest standard required. Under these circumstances the very idea of including such men in the Council with power to sit on judgment and inflict punishment upon duly qualified medical men cannot be conceived. It would lower the dignity, authority and prestige of the Council, and lower the status of the duly qualified medical profession.

(b) It is a recognised fact that the inclusion of the men belonging to these two classes of public service in the register was strongly opposed by the properly qualified Medical Profession at the time of the introduction of the Medical Registration Act in the years 1909-12. Public meetings of the members of the Medical profession were held in Bombay to protest against the proposal. It was contended on behalf of Government that these men rendered useful services in areas where qualified medical men could not be engaged on financial grounds and in subordinate medical work under Government in Civil and Military Employ and their inclusion in the register was necessary for the exigencies of their services in which they were employed and particularly for rendering their Medical Certificates valid in cases of death and illness occurring in areas where qualified medical men were not obtainable.

If after having included them for registration for the exigencies of the Government services an attempt is now made to put them on the Council the Profession would be fully justified in resenting such an entirely unexpected innovation. It might be stated here in passing that at a meeting of qualified Medical men convened under the auspices of the Bombay Branch of the British Medical Association on 18th November 1909 as the promoters of the meeting had also invited the Military Assistant and Sub-Assistant Surgeons a very large number of members of the qualified Medical profession resented their presence and left the meeting in a body particularly because such procedure was unheard of and unprecedented in the Medical history of this Presidency.

(c) The interests of these men would not suffer in any way if they are represented as at present on the Council by duly qualified men of their own selection who will be keen in guarding the interests of their electors.

(d) In withholding from them the right of electing one of their own body the Honourable Member in charge of the bill will be doing a great service to these men who with a view to qualify themselves for seats on the Council will try to attain higher standard of preliminary and professional training with benefit to themselves and the public.

Re Section III of the proposed amendment.

The Union respectfully submits that the "Explanation" recommended to be added to Section 7 is extremely objectionable.

(a) Under the Bombay Medical Act of 1912, the duly qualified Medical men are placed under a strict disciplinary jurisdiction of the Bombay Medical Council. This Council is given certain powers by the Act. If this "Explanation" be added to the Act, it will be a serious interference with the functions of the Council. This body of duly qualified men should be allowed to have their own way, and to be guided by their own rules and regulations in considering and deciding on the conduct of one of their own body, whether such conduct is or is not infamous in a professional respect.

(b) The same rule guides Medical men and their Councils in other parts of the civilised world, such as the General Medical Council of the United Kingdom. Similar rules guide also the well constituted Associations of the other learned professions, viz., that of the lawyers. Their own professional brethren alone are the best Judges of the conduct of one of their own body, which laymen cannot understand.

In no cases, such conduct is defined, as it is very difficult, to do so, but every case is left to be judged on its own merits.

(c) The Bombay Medical Council has adopted for its guidance certain Rules and Regulations on principles of the General Medical Council, as far as they are applicable under Indian enactments. Thus the Council considers (in the words of a learned Judge) "all conduct as infamous conduct in a professional respect, when it is proved that a Medical man has done something with regard to his profession, which would be reasonably regarded as disgraceful and dishonourable by his professional brethren of good repute and competency". A large number of instances and forms of professional misconduct are given in the warning notice at the beginning of the Bombay Medical Register. Every registered Medical man knows that if he offends against them, he is liable to punishment laid down by himself and his own brethren. From this it will be seen that it is not at all desirable to interfere with the functions of the Council or in other words to tell the Medical Council to judge of the conduct of one of their own profession not in the way the profession would like to do, but in a way the public would suggest.

(d) The acts mentioned under Explanation (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 3 of the proposed amendment in the opinion of the Union are deemed "infamous conduct in Professional respect" for the following reasons :.

Sub-clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) propose to protect the class of men practising as Vaids, Hakims, etc. Now the majority of men practising under the designation of Vaids and Hakims are illiterate and uneducated. They have not studied the Ayurvedic, Unani or other indigenous systems of Medicine such as they are but are only practising Medicine from what little knowledge they may happen to acquire as compounders, assistants to Vaids and Hakims or as their menial servants. Generally they study a book of recipes for different ailments and boldly prescribe for any and every disease without making any diagnosis. They may be successful in some of the minor and common ailments which get cured by themselves or by the use of popular household remedies; but in serious cases or in those requiring knowledge and skill in diagnosis and treatment they do more harm than good. Some of them have the audacity to call themselves specialists in one branch or another, when they are incapable of studying even a whole book of prescriptions. They rest themselves satisfied with practice based on one or two cures of effective recipes they happen to know and call themselves specialists. Many of them prescribe English drugs and medicines without having any conception of their composition or properties and under fictitious Indian names.

Ayurvedic and Unani systems of Medicines did exist as a science in olden times some centuries ago, but in the absence of any scientific development or organised study, the same has become so entirely antiquated and attenuated that it has been mostly forgotten, and the old names are mere tools in the hands of the majority of these Vaids and Hakims who are quacks.

Western Medical Science has made very rapid progress and what was believed to be cause and treatment of many diseases some years ago has been considered obsolete now and new and more successful methods of treatment and diagnosis, etc., come into existence every year. If under such circumstances people of India are made to believe that the old Ayurvedic and Unani systems of Medicine are even now as good as the Western system of Medicine hundreds of years after their inception, we believe we are not only misguiding the lay public but doing them great harm by encouraging them to adopt the old and forgotten systems of Medicine practised now mostly by illiterate and uneducated men and by depriving them indirectly of the benefits of the progressive Western system of Medicine.

If men practising the Western science of Medicine are allowed to assist and encourage the class of men practising these old and forgotten systems of medicine they will be legalizing covering quacks and thereby not only will the status of qualified men be degraded but quackery and illegal practice will be encouraged and perpetuated to the detriment of the interests of the masses of suffering humanity.

It is a great pity that Government should have been asked to perpetuate this state of affairs by conceding too much to sentimental supporters of quackery, and it will be a greater pity if Government will allow any such additions to the Bombay Medical Act, which will permit the association in any way of duly qualified men with quacks and their institutions as contemplated by the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill.

In conclusion the Union trusts that the Council will be pleased to give due consideration to the suggestions placed before it.

We have the honour to be,

To

THE SECRETARY TO THE COUNCIL OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY, FOR MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS.

A Bill further to amend the Bombay Act No. VI of 1912, as amended by Acts No. IV of 1912 and Nos. III and IV of 1916.

The Members of Bombay Branch of the British Medical Association have the honour to forward the following Resolutions, passed at their meeting held on 16th July 1917, and to request that the same be considered while discussing the Honourable Mr. V. J. Patel's Bill which is to come before the meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council.

Resolution No. 1—

"That the Branch approve of the substitution of the word 'Four' in place of the word 'Six' in clause (b), sub-section (2) of section 2".

Resolution No. 2—

"That the Branch do not approve of the suggested addition of clause (e) to section 2, sub-section (2) but proposes the following clauses (e) and (f) to section 2, sub-section (2):—

(a) Clause (e) 'one member elected by the Members of the Medical Faculty of the University of Bombay from among themselves.'

Resolution No. 3—

"That the new clause (d) proposed to be added to sub-section (4) of section 2 be omitted."

Resolution No. 4—

"That it is inadvisable to add the explanations proposed to be inserted at the end of section 7; these additions will necessarily interfere with the legitimate work of the Council and frustrate its main function, viz., checking quackery."

Resolution No. 5—

"That the Branch Council will forward the above with a suitable explanatory letter to the Secretary of the Bombay Legislative Council."

The Members think that a reduction in the number of Government nominees is desirable especially as this will give direct representation to the University and the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the two important bodies, who have to deal with Medical education in the Presidency.

The Branch object to the election on the Council of Members grouped in the proposed clause (d) in section 2, sub-section 4 of the Honourable Mr. Patel's Bill as they have a low standard of general education and hence could not be registered in the Register of the United Kingdom and they are not accepted as members of the British Medical Association. If this clause be added the question of reciprocity with Registers of other countries such as that of the United Kingdom, &c., will be impossible.

If the explanation to section 7 as proposed by the Honourable Mr. Patel is added, the Medical Council will not be able to exercise its most important function, and one of the most urgent needs for supplying which the Act came into existence will remain unfulfilled—the suppression of quackery.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS.

The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS:—Your Excellency, I have the melancholy pleasure to move the following resolution:—

> "That this Council places on record its deep sense of loss at the death of Mr. Dadabhoy Naoroji, the Grand Old Man of India, who rendered great and life-long services to His motherland."

In speaking to this resolution I do not propose to take up the time of this Council by giving you a full biographical account of the lamented deceased. By doing so I shall be simply wearying you by going over ground which has been extensively traversed from press and platform, in the numerous tributes that have been paid to his memory. Dr. Dadabhoy's connection with this Council was neither recent nor long although he was once connected with it. But even if he had had no connection with it, it would not have been out of place to take obituary notice of him in this place. Bombay was his birth place and this Council being the highest assembly in the Bombay Presidency, is proud that this Presidency produced such a man and consequently deeply mourns his loss. For it is perhaps hardly once in a century that a man of the stamp and calibre of Dadabhoy Naoroji makes his appearance on the stage in the life of a nation. His was a unique personality and a unique life which nobody that I have known or heard of in this country has yet been able to approach. His was an exceptionally stainless, righteous and selfless life, solely dedicated to the service of his mother country. He was the father and founder of many a movement for the regeneration of this land. He enjoyed the unique honour of being the first Indian in Parliament. He knew no distinctions of colour, race or religion among his countrymen, his services to whom extended to more than half a century. Thanks to His benign Grace, The Almighty endowed him with more than the usual span of life allotted to my countrymen and no career could have been more honourably spent. He was a man of noble thoughts, noble words and noble deeds. And let us pray that although his body is gone, the memory of his actions will always remain with us and serve as a shining example to generations yet unborn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I am glad to add my word to the touching reference which we have listened to in the speech of the honourable member, and to pay my tribute of respect and regard to the memory of a great citizen and a great statesman.

I had the privilege of the personal acquaintance and friendship of Dr. Dadabhoy Naoroji and I well remember when first I visited him at his home at Versova, the great impression made on my mind by the keenness of his brain, his knowledge of public affairs and his deep interest in the progress of his country, notwithstanding his great age. None who were present will ever forget that great gathering of citizens and students of Bombay who met to do him honour only a few months ago in the University or the dignity of his refined and fragile figure when he rose to receive at my hands the highest honour which it is in the power of the University to bestow.

He was a citizen of the Empire in its truest sense, for not only did he devote his life to the service of his native land, but he had the hitherto rare experience for an Indian of using his vote and influence in the Imperial Parliament in England, to which he was sent, not by the votes of his own fellow countrymen, but by the citizens of that part of the Empire to which we Englishmen belong. The hand of death has been heavy indeed during the last few years on the tried and trusted leaders in our public life: Gokhale, Pherozeshah Mehta, and now Dadabhoy Naoroji have all been taken from us. We can ill spare them in these anxious and strenuous times. But they have left us the fine example of their public service and I trust that we shall always find in this country, in future years, great leaders as much respected and trusted by the people, and with an equal sense of fairness, of courage and fearlessness in all their public and political thought and action, who will carry on the work of these great men and will lead this country on by sure and certain progress to the goal of self-government within the Empire which it should be the ideal of every loyal patriot to attain. I will ask honourable members to pass this resolution in silence, rising in their seats.

The resolution was carried, members rising in their seats.

The Honourable Mr. G. CARMICHAEL:—Your Excellency,—As will be seen from the budget memorandum which has been placed on the table, the estimates embodied in the revised financial statement which was before this Council at our meeting in March last, have been accepted without modification by the Government of India. At this stage, it is hardly necessary for me to go over the detailed heads again. Of new matter, the memorandum indicates how it is proposed to utilise the allotment of 90 lakhs under 45, Civil Works. Paragraph 3 shows what progress has been made in determining how the non-recurring assignment of 1½ lakhs out of the profits of the wheat scheme should be spent. There is a balance of Rs. 85,000 unallotted. Under the conditions on which we received the assignment, this amount must be devoted to some special schemes of agricultural development and we are awaiting further recommendations from the Director of Agriculture. With regard to the other assignment from Imperial revenues which was announced at our last meeting, the recurring assignment of 2½ lakhs for the improvement of pay and training of teachers, proposals for utilising the money are not yet ready and I am therefore not in a position to say how the amount is to be applied. I understand however that my honourable colleague in charge of the educational department is having prepared a detailed review of the educational needs of the Presidency in order that a definite and adequate programme for the future may be laid down.

The memorandum enables a comparison to be made between the actuals of 1915-16 and the budget for the current year. On the revenue side there is a satisfactory expansion of nearly 39½ lakhs. This is arrived at after making the adjustments rendered necessary on account of the change introduced this year in the method of meeting famine expenditure and after leaving out of account the 4 lakhs of new assignments from Imperial revenues. Over and above this increase of 39½ lakhs there is an increase of 28·30 lakhs due to the new taxation mainly income tax, but as this is passed on at once to Imperial revenues through the transfer account it does not affect the total estimated revenue of 805 lakhs. Similarly on the expenditure side, the proposals are for rather more than 41 lakhs in excess of what was actually spent in 1915-16.

Our provincial balance is mounting up and is expected to reach the figure of 259 lakhs at the close of the year. I have been charged with gloating over this accumulation. I should be as glad as any one if the money could be spent as it comes in. But we must adjust our expenditure in the interests of the country as a whole. The first and vital object is the successful prosecution of the war, and it is at least some satisfaction to feel that in this particular matter of increase of revenue and economy in expenditure the measure of our financial assistance has been as large as the figures now before you show.

As usual the forecast for the year is based on the assumption of a normal monsoon. Up to date prospects have been somewhat varied, entirely favourable in parts and somewhat backward in others. Gujarat has had an abundant rainfall, and the cultivators on the Western Ghats have had an unusually good sowing season. In the Konkan the rainfall has been about normal. On the other hand, the two districts of Khandesh, the East Deccan and the Southern Maratha Country have had to endure a long break but there are signs that things are now taking a turn for the better.

In Sind the river has been very slow in rising and the inundation is still in a backward condition with the result that in Upper Sind, as I understand from the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE, the rice crop has suffered to some extent, and in other parts of the country there has been some deficiency of water for irrigation. It is very fortunate that this year the public works department undertook and carried out expeditiously a big clearance in the Jamrao Canal which has mitigated to some extent the shortage of water that has occurred in that tract. If the clearance had not been done at the time, matters would have been much more serious.

Several honourable members have favoured me with notes of the points on which they ask for information or which they propose to discuss. I am very glad to have them in advance. I propose to deal with them in replying on the debate.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur VENKATESH SHRINIWAS NAIK:—May it please Your Excellency,—I rise with feelings of diffidence as to the advisability of criticising the budget during the third year of the great war, but I am, however, encouraged by the fact that though there is a heavy strain on the finances of our Government, due to the continuance of war these three years, the revised figures of revenue for the last year were much better than the estimate and the estimated receipts of revenue for this year which are based upon the actual working of the budget and upon the presumption that the season this year would be an ordinarily good one, are still better being respectively Rs. 4,09,000 and Rs. 53,74,000 more than the revised and budget figures of the last year. The budget as prepared by my friend, the Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL, is a document giving a full and fair statement of our financial position, and taken as a whole breathes prosperity in almost all its revenue branches. Our revenue receipts since this great war, have been steadily progressing. In 1914-15—the first year of the war—they were Rs. 7,47,59,000, in 1915-16—the second year—they were Rs. 7,51,90,000, in 1916-17—the third year—they were Rs. 8,01,25,000 according to the revised figures, and during this year they are estimated to be Rs. 8,05,34,000, i. e., 57,75,000 more than what our revenue could bring us before the beginning of this world wide conflict. In respect to our expenditure, on account of the exigencies of war during these three years we had to be content with economy budgets and I may say that the expenditure has been well maintained within the proper limits ranging from Rs. 7,88,65,000 to Rs. 7,36,05,000 during the last year as per revised figures. I have very great pleasure in congratulating our finance member on the care and foresight bestowed in preparing this budget at such a time of financial stringency and upon the lucid and clear explanation of the same. Although during these three years of war there has been a heavy strain on the finances of our Empire, it is most satisfactory to see that on account of the strong, wise and judicial control of the finance member over the purse strings of this Presidency, our balances are expected at the end of the current year according to our budget, to leave in our hands Rs. 2,59,31,000 being Rs. 1,05,03,000 more than what we had on hand at the beginning of the war or nearly one-third of our expected revenue from all sources during the year, after providing for a well maintained expenditure attempting to meet the needs of this Presidency as far as possible in its various branches. Without, however, in the least disagreeing with the far seeing and valuable views of the Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL, that while the war lasts, it is of utmost importance that our resources should not be drawn upon to a larger extent than it is absolutely necessary to secure efficiency in our administration, I am sure I shall not be stepping beyond the limits of financial prudence, if I may respectfully draw your Excellency's attention to the fact that provision of expenditure allotments under educational, medical and sanitation heads have still not been adequate enough to meet the needs of the Presidency.

I shall be failing in my duty if I do not at the outset express the very high indebtedness of the Karnatics for providing us with an Arts College and thus removing one of our greatest wants. It is most gratifying to notice that this college has been opened at a time when the Government purse has been stretched to its utmost, and we sincerely hope that when better times come our college will be made a full fledged one, and your Excellency will earn the good will of the Karnatics by completely removing one of our most needed wants and your Excellency will ever be remembered by the Karnatics with pride and gratitude for this benevolent action of yours, in providing this most highly desirable object of far reaching public importance. We all know that many of our village primary schools are not located in independent, well ventilated and spacious houses. It is one of the primary duties of the local boards to provide these village primary schools with spacious and well ventilated houses. Although the purse strings of the local boards are tugged from all sides on account of their expanding expenditure in various branches there has accumulated in many boards a considerable portion of the educational share of the local cess, which has been earmarked as building fund, and the distribution of this fund has been held in abeyance on account of the proportionate provincial Government grant not being forthcoming. I realise fully, that we are reasonably expected, not to raise our voices if many of our cherished schemes will have to be held back, on account of the conditions due to the war, but I hope that this most important matter of accommodating our village school children in better ventilated, sanitary and spacious houses, will receive the special attention of your Excellency and the Director of Public Instruction. The accumulation of such a fund in the Dharwar district has been more than 65,000 rupees.

The provision of Rs. 15,000 under the head "Medical" for the opening of new dispensaries in the Presidency, is quite inadequate. The number of hospitals and dispensaries in this Presidency at the end of 1915 was 770, that is one institution for every 35,000 souls. Your Excellency is aware that in this Presidency the number of persons living in villages with a population of less than 2,000 in each is more than two-thirds of the population of the whole of this Presidency and out of these 770 hospitals and dispensaries I believe practically none are situated in villages with a population less than 2,000 and thus more than two-thirds of the population are still without medical aid.

We are thankful to the Government of India for placing at the disposal of your Excellency's Government Rs. 1,50,000 out of the profits of the wheat scheme for the improvement and development of agriculture generally. Out of this amount Rs. 85,000 still remain to be distributed and in this connection I may observe that three years before when I moved a resolution in the Council asking Government, in the interests of agriculture, to prospect for artesian and subartesian supply of water, Government, I must acknowledge, were kind enough to accept my resolution and have started such experiments in boring shallow and deep wells under the supervision of the agricultural and sanitary Engineers to Government. But the rate at which the experiments are carried on is not at all very encouraging and I request most humbly that a greater portion of this money may with greatest advantage be used for developing these boring departments. Your Excellency is aware that agriculture is the greatest industry in this Presidency and contributes the major portion of our revenues and it is of the utmost importance to promote its growth in every way. I must once again bring to your Excellency's notice the excellent results of steam plough work in my taluka. During the last year though the working season was very short on account of rainfall in almost every month the earnings of the plough have been satisfactory and after defraying the expenses of working and allowing sufficient amount for the depreciation of the plant they are sufficient, I believe, to pay an interest at 6 per cent. on the capital invested. The heavy demand for the steam plough work in my and other neighbouring talukas and the inquiries from distant parts of the district show how highly people appreciate its work and looking to the splendid results and the necessity of improving lands I humbly suggest that one more such plough may with greatest advantage be purchased and worked in black soil cotton-growing tracts. I admit that the department of agriculture will have to work a little in the rainy season to secure and book lands for the next year's working as the rayats generally are not so very pushing to come forward and apply to Government for the plough work due only to their shyness and conservatism, but when the departmental overseer goes to a village where there are such grass-infested lands the rayats flock to him in offering their lands and he finds very little or practically no difficulty in booking work for the next year. Looking to the advantage and the good work done in the cause of agriculture the department is justified in allowing a few of its subordinates to secure and book lands for the next year. Another important and useful object upon which this amount can with advantage be utilised is a seed farm for the Karnatic. The necessity of such a farm is greatly felt by the Karnatics as the supply of pure and unmixed seeds is not easily available and I submit that Government will utilise this money in providing a seed farm for the rich cotton-growing tract of the Karnatic.

I beg to draw your Excellency's attention to a most hard-worked and neglected lot of public servants, I mean the mamlatdars of the talukas. These revenue and administrative officers being at the head of each taluka are responsible to almost all the departments. Their lot in respect to the pressure of work from all sides since the outbreak of war has been most pathetic. The scale of their pay and gradation has been fixed long ago when they had very little to do with works of various branches of administration except revenue. Looking to the varied nature of hard work they are doing, I think a revision in the scale of their pay and gradation is a necessity. It might sometimes be argued that even their present pay and prospects are sufficient and a large number of suitable candidates are easily available. The candidates recruited for this service generally are from the subordinate clerical service and most of the young clerks enter this branch with hopes of getting deputy collectorships and old and middle aged ones solely because they have no other goal in service. They are required to travel in their talukas for more than half a month and are paid only Rs. 25 as monthly travelling allowances. In these days of high labour and struggle for existence everywhere it is needless for me to say that this petty allowance is barely sufficient to meet the cost of extra staff and conveyances they will have to maintain in consistence with their dignity and position. I submit that your Excellency will consider sympathetically the case of this hard-worked and most useful set of public servants. I think I should not conclude my observations on the budget without giving expression assuring our sincere loyalty to the Throne and conviction in the matter of the speedy and complete success of the British arms and those of the allies in the great war.

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMAT:—May it please your Excellency,—Before I make a few observations on the budget, I trust I shall be allowed to give expression on behalf of this Council to our feelings of congratulation for the Presidency upon the extension of term which the Secretary of State has been pleased to accord to your Excellency. Your Excellency during the time of the past few years has worked for the advancement of the presidency, ably and zealously assisted by Her Excellency Lady Willingdon, and I believe so far as this Council is concerned we have always received at your Excellency's hands every courtesy and fairness.

Now coming to the budget proper, I believe there will be but one feeling in the presidency, I am sure, namely of sincere satisfaction about this year's budget, a feeling that although we are in the midst of the great struggle that is going on, still thanks to a fortunate succession so far of good seasons, an unexpected prosperity of trade and industries and a close application of economy the Presidency will be passing through the third, or rather entering now the fourth year of the war with a revenue of 8 crores, a surplus of 17 lakhs over the expenditure and a large closing balance of 2 crores and 59 lakhs to its credit.

But while this unprecedentedly large closing balance is undoubtedly a matter of congratulation for us all, may I venture to ask the Honourable the Finance Member whether, in view of the many crying and standing needs of the Presidency, it was not possible to reduce consistently with caution this balance so as to make good, still further than what Government have already done the past two years' retrenchments in many directions? We do recognise no doubt the need for economy at this time, both in the interest of imperial finance as well as to provide for lean years; but on the other hand we owe it to the maintenance of a steady flow of progress of the Presidency not to have also an overcautious conservation of our financial reserve, in accumulating so unusual a balance. I should therefore feel grateful to the Honourable the Finance Member for a word of elucidation as to how far this balance could be drawn upon for our long-delayed problems, without sacrificing the interest of "our bankers—the Government of India," as he called them at the March meeting.

It is indeed a relief, my lord, to notice that this year Government have been able to introduce a welcome relaxation from the last two years' restrictions on expenditure; but it strikes me that considering the improvement in our financial position, the important head of sanitation proper has had a crumb of only ten lakhs out of a total revenue of Rs. 805 lakhs. This works out to something like 3 pies in the rupee,—quite an inadequate, almost a niggardly share, especially when we know that many a scheme in aid of sanitation of our towns and villages has been hung up from year to year.

But as if by way of contrast with this head of expenditure, another striking feature of the expenditure budget is the ever-increasing expenditure on our old friend, Head No. 20—Police. War, or no war, this head, it seems, knows no retrenchments, as the following figures will show :—

	Rs.
1913-14	1,00,58,000
1914-15	1,04,25,000
1915-16	1,05,80,000
1916-17	1,10,09,000
1917-18	1,12,49,000

Add to this year's figure nine lakhs more for police buildings, and we reach the huge total of one crore and twenty-one lakhs, fully 15 per cent. of our revenue or nearly 30 pies in the rupee for the police alone, as compared with 3 pies for sanitation.

Now, my lord, we fully recognise the supreme importance of this department, especially in these times, but I believe I am echoing the feeling uppermost in the minds of every member when I say that, next after the prosecution of the war, we trust Government will give education, and education alone, the first and foremost position in their annual budgets.

It is true, my lord, that education at present stands a second best on the list and we know it possesses a very warm corner in your Excellency's heart, but for some reason or other the police department has been for years past the first love of Government, a position which we are convinced it does not need, nor deserve. Thus, it is almost painful to find that during the last two years of stringency while the police got its full share, education had to receive a set-back inasmuch as the opening of new primary schools was postponed, school-building was at a standstill, secondary education has been handicapped and various education schemes have been held up.

But when I say that the police department has obtained more than its due, I am well aware that, so far as the rank and file of the policemen are concerned, their pay is scarcely a living wage, their house-accommodation scanty, and consequently I know there is a great difficulty in getting good recruits. But the real question, with all our sympathy for the rank and file is,

Is the Presidency over-policed ?

I do not pretend to know, sir, the internal working of the department, as no non-official probably is privileged to know it ; but if Government statistics and reports mean anything there is undoubtedly a primâ facie case to believe that under the reorganisation scheme the department appears to be overmanned or over-officered beyond the requirements of the Presidency. I shall attempt to show this from the remarks of government officers themselves. Thus, the Commissioner, Central Division, in his latest divisional police report says: "There are many administrative officers of experience and discernment in responsible positions who think that the numbers, both of men and police-stations, have been increased under the reorganisation scheme beyond requirements. The present police expenditure is so large that improvements in pay and prospects of men can perhaps be effected by a reduction in numbers, and indeed one better-paid and more contented man is better and more useful than two indifferent and unsuitable men."

The district magistrate of Poona in the same report remarks as follows:— "Whether the district generally is not over-policed is a matter which appears to merit investigation. A taluka like Sirur, which is exceptionally free from crime, has no less than 3 police-stations, 3 sub-inspectors, 9 head constables and 30 unarmed constables; yet cognizable crimes reported during the past twelve months at all the 3 stations numbered 66 only." This means 22 investigations per annum. The Police Commission has suggested, I think, one police-station for about a 100 investigations.

My lord, the same is the tenour of the remarks of the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE, Commissioner, S. D. He writes that "the cost of the police force has increased enormously under the reorganisation and it is time to scrutinise the scheme once more". And the Commissioner, N. D., the Honourable Mr. PRATT, quotes one of his superintendents of police, namely that of Surat, who frankly says:—"I have not greatly missed being habitually short of fifty men or so, since there is little crime and little real work (many police-stations and outposts being in my humble opinion mere loafs or baitnaka-jagas) while both the city (of Surat) and Rander are over-policed."

The Honourable Mr. PRATT adds: "There seems reason to believe that it may be possible to get a considerable increase of efficiency without any extra cost by readjusting the distribution settled at the time of the last reorganisation."

In view of these opinions it is high time, my Lord, to see if the Presidency is not over-policed and if it is found to be so, to cut down what I expect will be a very large expenditure from this head, and devote the same to many more useful objects for the advancement of the Presidency.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE.—Your Excellency.—I have to make a few remarks on the budget. I see that in the budget expenditure figures for 1917-1918 as compared with 1916-1917, there is an increased expenditure under the heads of education, sanitation, agriculture and public works including communications. The increased expenditure, as compared with the previous year, under these 4 heads amounts to Rs. 31,74,000. This increase is a matter of satisfaction to me because all expenditure under these heads reaches the bulk of tax-payers more directly than expenditure in the other heads of the budget. Coming to the particular items of the budget I find that under the talukdari settlement office, the tax-payer has to bear a charge of Rs. 27,000. Now, if we look to the history of this office, we find that it was started in 1862 for the protection of the aristocracy or the talukdars in Gujarat. In 1862 they were in very embarrassed circumstances and Government very rightly went to their rescue by appointing a special talukdari settlement officer for improving their condition. Fifty-five years have elapsed since then. This is the third generation after the special legislation for talukdars was passed and since the talukdari settlement officer was appointed. I think, sir, that the condition of the talukdars in these 55 years should have improved to such an extent that no further protection by special legislation should now be needed for them. The first generation of embarrassed talukdars has disappeared. The second generation has disappeared and we are now in the third generation. If the talukdars still want protection by special legislation, I think they are in a hopeless position and they should be given up. So the talukdari settlement office should either be stopped, or if Government still think that special measures are needed for their protection, the tax-payer should not be made to pay for this special office. The Rs. 27,000 which it is proposed to spend for the maintenance of this special office, should find no place in the budget. The whole cost of that office should be debited to and recovered from the talukdari estates. I find that there is a special office of the same description in Sind. There is a manager for incumbered estates in Sind. I find, Sir, on reference to the budget, that the whole cost of this office is recovered from the incumbered estates and the same principle should be extended to the talukari settlement office. Either the talukdari settlement office should find no place in the next year's budget or, if the talukdari settlement office is still considered necessary, the whole of the cost should be recovered from the estates of the talukdars.

I want to invite the attention of Government to the policy that they are pursuing of constructing residences for their officers. I find in the budget a provision of Rs. 20,000 for land for building civil bungalows at Poona and a provision of Rs. 50,000 for what is called "The Public Works Colony" at Yeravda near Poona. I want Government to reconsider and to give fresh thought to this policy. In rising towns like Poona, Bombay, Jalgaon and other places there is considerable difficulty with regard to accommodation for civil officers. But the difficulty does not exist in the case of superior officers only. It extends to all ranks of Government servants. In the City of Poona I find that peons, clerks and subordinate officers of Government find it very difficult to get decent and convenient accommodation. The question is, is Government going to provide residential accommodation for this army of Government servants at the expense of the tax-payer? If they are, I think they are taking a very large burden upon themselves. Another point that requires consideration at present is the current rate of interest on money. The present rate, at which the Government of India are raising funds, is $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. In addition, there is depreciation and the cost of repairs in the case of residential dwellings. So to the $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. we have to add about 2 per cent. or $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for depreciation and repairs which gives about $7\frac{1}{2}$ or 8 per cent. I think therefore that the tax-payer will be quite justified in asking for a return of about 8 per cent. on the amount he spends upon these residential buildings. Now, will the officers and servants of Government be willing to pay rents to cover returns to this extent? If they are asked to do so, they will probably back out, and say that they will treat with private landlords themselves and make their own arrangements as regards their residences. I think under these circumstances that Government should reconsider their policy in the case of providing residences for government officers. In the case of officers like the postmaster, the telegraph master, the sirkarkun and the customs karkun, I can quite understand that they should have residences constructed for them because the tax-payer wants them to stay near their offices but in the case of other officers of Government, Government should leave the question of house accommodation for settlement between the officers themselves and the landlords of the locality concerned.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—If there are no landlords?

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE:—By giving guarantees or other means we should bring them into existence. There are certain places, I grant, like Karwar, where it is impossible to get any private landlord to come forward and construct a building for rent, but I believe that in a city like Poona or in a city like Surat it is not impossible to get landlords to come forward to construct residences on which they will get more than 6 or 7 per cent. So this question of residential accommodation seems to me to be a matter which should be further considered by Government. There are two points to be considered, firstly, that Government will have to construct residences for all officers of Government from peons to heads of departments and, secondly, that the tax-payer will want a return of about 8 per cent. on the funds that are laid out on these residences.

I want also to draw the attention of Government to the provision that has been made for certain improvements to roads.

There is a provision made for Rs. 55,000 for constructing causeways on the road from Dhond to Manmad. In the case of this road, there is a railway line running parallel to the road within a few miles of the road line. The bulk of the traffic in the road area is carried by the railway. There are a number of goods and passenger trains on the railway. Now Government propose to spend Rs. 55,000 on certain improvements of this road which are by no means urgent. On the other hand, I can tell you as president of the district local board, Poona, how urgent the need is for additional grants for communications in the mofussil. I have got in the district of Poona a mileage of 1,028 miles for which the board cannot assign more than Rs. 27,000 for repairs and upkeep. This gives a rate of a little over Rs. 26 per mile. Moreover, sir, I find that in the case of some taluka local boards, the assignment that the boards can give to some roads is at the rate of Rs. 5 per mile. I want the Council to consider whether the assignment of Rs. 5 per mile can do anything that can be called efficient repairs to the roads. Practically it will do very little. The cooly, who wanted three annas a day a few years ago, wants now eight annas and ten annas per day. When there are communications like these in the mofussil which require large sums for their upkeep and maintenance, is it right that Government should spend sums like Rs. 55,000 on the improvements of roads in areas where there is already adequate and efficient railway communication? I grant that roads must be maintained in the best possible condition, but further expenditure on these particular roads in railway areas should be discouraged and the grants intended for them should be assigned for the improvement of roads in the mofussil.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL :—Where is the causeway, may I ask?

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE continuing:—I find in the budget that they are to be constructed at Kolhar, Rahuri and Kopargaon in the Nagar district.

Next I come to my old friend, the Kennedy sea-face wall. I find that the budget contains provision of three lakhs of rupees for the construction of this wall during the current year and that the estimate of this work is Rs. 12,40,000. I am almost sure that the actual cost of construction will be very much higher than the estimate. Instead of Rs. 12,40,000 it will be Rs. 20,00,000. Now what I ask is whether the millionaires and rich inhabitants of Bombay should enjoy the advantages to be derived from this wall for their riding path and their walking promenade at the expense of the poor tax-payers in the Ahmednagar, Sholapur and other mofussil districts? I think, sir, that Government should make an earnest endeavour to hand over this work to that rich body which is rolling in wealth, namely, the municipality of Bombay.

The last item that I have got in my mind is with regard to industrial and technical schools. I find that the provision that is made for these schools is only Rs. 4,70,000. It seems to me, sir, that this branch of education is being neglected and it ought to receive greater support at the hands of Government. There is one direction which I can indicate from which improvement can come, and that is this: I find in the budget a provision of Rs. 30,000 for the advisory committee on industrial and technical schools. Now a committee is a good institution by itself. But the question is whether it is the best agency for doing sustained continuous ordinary work. I hold, sir, that in the case of technical and industrial education, it will be a far better arrangement if Government were to appoint an inspector in place of this committee. Instead of spending Rs. 30,000 on a committee which is composed of professional men who have got their own business to attend to, I think, industrial and technical education will receive a greater impetus if it is placed in the hands of an inspector. Government at present have got an inspector of drawing. The question is, cannot this inspector look after the industrial and technical schools in addition to drawing? They are allied subjects, and I myself see no difficulty in entrusting this inspector of drawing with the work of inspection of technical and industrial schools. Government will do well to give consideration to this suggestion.

Then I come, sir, to the point of separate sanitary districts for the Bombay Presidency. I find that there are two of these sanitary districts, with two separate executive engineers to go over the areas assigned to them and to design and execute sanitary works in those areas. I do not think that this is an economical arrangement. Last time your Excellency cornered me by asking me to show which department or which officer can be abolished, and I now unhesitatingly point out that these two officers can certainly go without loss of efficiency. Their offices should be abolished and the work which they do at present can be assigned to the ordinary executive engineers of the districts concerned. As regards sanitary works—both the execution and designing of them—they can be carried out by the executive engineers of the districts concerned under the orders and advice of the special sanitary engineer whom Government have appointed.

These are the points which I think should receive the attention of Government in framing the next year's budget.

The Honourable SHEIKH GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH:—Your Excellency,—I would like to make a few remarks about the rural population in Sind. Most of the rural population in Sind consists of Mumammadans. They are ignorant of the very rudiments of knowledge, because not even schools for primary education have been given to them and there is need for these schools. The number of primary schools in Sind is very small in proportion to the population and the number of villages. Their ignorance and illiteracy are wholly responsible for their hopeless thriftlessness and extravagance and indebtedness and consequent poverty. If the Government has tried to save them from the rapacity of money-lenders by extending special legislation, the very necessity for this legislation shows that their hopeless condition is due to want of education.

In the rural areas of the Presidency education is imparted partly at the expense of the district local boards and partly at the expense of Government. District local boards spend a portion of the cess they collect on education and Government makes contribution in proportion in the shape of grants-in-aid. But owing to the crippled resources of the district local boards primary education in the rural areas has not made sufficient progress. Therefore, I would suggest that a certain portion of the revenue from Sind should be set aside for primary education in the rural areas of Sind.

Coming to the question of secondary education, I find that the condition of the people in Sind is worse. During the last 10 years only 7 anglo-vernacular schools have been opened in rural areas. The number is very small. There are high schools which are far away from the rural areas, but owing to the expense and the long distance parents cannot send their children to the high schools.

As regards higher education, their condition is still worse. The Muhammadan Education Committee appointed by Government has made certain recommendations about primary, secondary and higher education, and I trust Your Excellency's Government will favourably consider those recommendations.

We are thankful to your Excellency's Government for a grant of Rs. 1,00,000 for secondary education, but we require much larger amounts than that, and it was therefore that the zemindars and jagirdars in Sind approached Government to give them permission to tax themselves. I can state now with confidence that, not only the zemindars and jagirdars of Sind, but the educated Muhammadans in Sind are ready to tax themselves. That is why the Honourable Mr. BHURGRI had brought in his bill before this Council to impose an education cess to improve the condition of the education of the Muhammadan population in Sind. Government said that there was not sufficient unanimity of opinion behind the bill. Now, my respectful and emphatic submission is that there does exist sufficient unanimity of opinion so far as can be ascertained, though there might be individuals who might be against it. The vast and intelligent opinion in favour of the resolution is such as to warrant its recognition on the part of Government. The Mussalmans of Sind are quite at a loss to understand this attitude on the part of Government in refusing to grant recognition to the wishes of the people when they wanted to tax themselves and this is their grievance. We all look forward to your Excellency's Government in that direction to give us the help which we fully deserve.

The Honourable Mr. MUNMOHANDASS RAMJI:—Your Excellency,—I desire to draw the attention of your Excellency and the Council to the prolonged delay that is taking place in properly equipping the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics. This institution was started under the most favourable auspices. It came into being in response to a very real and keen demand that India, like the advanced countries of Europe and America, should have a university college devoted exclusively to the study of problems of commercial, industrial and financial organization which in our time absorb so much of the best thought of the day. Such a college, it was felt, would (in conjunction, of course, with the practical training that can only be acquired by actual experience) give to the rising generation of young Indians embarking on a business career systematic knowledge and a wide outlook not otherwise obtainable, and would thus materially assist in fitting them for higher and more responsible positions in enterprises of every kind. Hence the founding of the college was cordially welcomed by the business community, and liberal donations were given by individuals, and by public bodies, towards the endowment of lectureships and even towards the general upkeep. These contributions, I may point out here, were promised at least by three bodies with which I am connected as a help to tide over initial difficulties, and now that the college has passed its stage of infancy these grants may be discontinued. Not that the stoppage of these grants must be construed as showing a lack of sympathy with the college. On the contrary, we greatly appreciate the fine work that has so far been accomplished under the watchful stimulus of its principal in spite of the limitations and the depressing atmosphere. It will merely betoken, if it comes on at all, a desire on the part of the commercial community that Government should now be prepared to take over the whole burden of the college. For Government, on their side, were pledged to find the remainder of the amount required to start and maintain the college in efficiency. I submit, with all respect, that this pledge has not been redeemed in anything like an adequate manner; and that there are no signs of any serious effort to redeem it in the immediate future.

The college has now been in existence nearly four years. Yet it is still lodged in a makeshift flat above a shop: most people in Bombay would probably be hard put to it to say where it is. These cramped and depressing premises are, from the nature of the case, in many respects quite unsuited to the teaching work that has to be carried on in them; and indeed the students can hardly feel that they belong to a pucca college at all. The advisory board, on which I represent the Bombay Native Piece-goods Merchants' Association, had repeatedly put before Government the urgency of taking definite steps to secure for the college and its fine library a site close to the business quarters of the city where a building worthy of the importance that attaches to the college, both from the commercial and the educational points of view, could be erected without further delay. Our representations, however, have so far resulted in nothing tangible. It is always possible, I am aware, to point to difficulties. But I contend that, given good-will and energy, they can and must be overcome. There are two or three possible sites in the Fort. As regards the cost of the building, it is not estimated that the sum which Government will have to add to the substantial fund already collected would be formidable: for the college, even allowing for expansion, does not require very extensive premises. Be that however as it may: I venture to take my stand on the broad ground that we cannot afford—and I use the word advisedly—to delay any further in the matter. Parsimony is not economy. We are continually confronted with the plea of "financial stringency owing to the war." Well, the war has not affected India in any way that can be distantly compared with the immense burdens that it has imposed on England. Yet the Home Government, in the face of a financial stringency surpassing anything hitherto known or dreamt of, has just sanctioned an unprecedented expenditure of nearly £4 millions on immediate educational development, besides adopting a comprehensive programme which in the next ten years will double the present outlay; and it has done this from motive of patriotism rightly understood. Surely this example cannot be lost on us out here, where the arrears to make up, both in education and in commercial organization, are so much greater.

I have pointed out that the prime need of Sydenham College is a building of its own. Its second requisite is a permanent, full-time staff, able and willing to give their whole energy and thought to their many-sided work. Here again it is profoundly to be regretted that Government have allowed a mistaken policy of retrenchment to govern their action or rather non-action. Men of the type required at a college of commerce can command good pay for the double reason that they are in great demand as teachers elsewhere, owing to the rapid spread of commercial and economic education, and that alternatively they can often enter a lucrative business. This apparently has not been recognized by Government in the case of Sydenham College. As a result, at least one brilliant young man, who would have been pre-eminently suited for a certain post, was not secured at all; one or two others left because it did not pay them to stay; and others again have had to be taken on as half-timers, because the salaries offered them were not such as to tempt them to devote themselves to the college unreservedly. This is a most unfortunate state of things. It undermines efficiency, and ought to be put an end to as soon as possible. But here again it is essential to abandon the timid attitude of false economy.

There is a cry in the air about the development of trade and industries of the British Empire and making India a self-sufficing country in the matter of industries. Will all this be possible if there is no satisfactory and systematic higher commercial and scientific institute in the country? My Lord, we are all proud of the fact that Bombay has taken the lead in establishing the first University college of commerce in India. But there is little doubt that this lead will pass from us, if the policy of drift continues. Already other Governments—that of the United Provinces for instance—are making far more generous provision for teaching and research than we are. And there are definite projects for starting colleges of commerce in other great centres. Surely it would be lamentable if Bombay were outdistanced in this respect, because, having begun well, we left our task half-finished.

With these remarks I conclude with a hope that in future Government will see their way to make more adequate and liberal provision in their budget for the rapid spread of commercial education.

I wish to say a word or two with regard to what fell from my honourable friend, Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE, about the Kennedy sea face. He says that rich Bombay folks and the rich Bombay municipality ought to defray that cost. Perhaps, he has not forgotten the discussion that took place on this point, a few years ago, in this Council. It was pointed out by our late lamented friend Sir Pherozeshah Mehta that that work was carried out not for the sake of the Bombayite or the Bombay municipality butf or the betterment and better upkeep of the harbour at that point, and it was a Government place, and therefore Government had to do it.

The Honourable Mr. EBRAHIM HAROON JAFFER:—My Lord,—Passing as we are through times of extraordinary stress and anxiety, it is not a little encouraging that the financial situation as disclosed in the provincial budget for the current year is satisfactory. Our revenue will be nearly Rs. 8 crores and the expenditure is expected to exceed the last year's figure by half a crore. The closing balance has now reached very high proportions, being about Rs. 2 crores. War conditions have imposed certain inevitable limitations upon the progress of finance and of other things. But, my Lord, this is a time when well-thought-out plans of reform and advancement ought to be laid down, so that they may be taken at the earliest opportunity. Questions of reform in the direction of expansion of education, sanitary improvements, progress of local self-government and the promotion of industries, may thus be discussed and schemes may be prepared. I am glad in this connection, that Government propose to spend an additional amount on education during the current year, and I must congratulate Government in particular, on a recurring grant of Rs. 18,000 they have made for scholarships to Mohamedan students in secondary schools in this Presidency. But I regret to find that the report of the committee appointed in 1914, to submit proposals for the education of Mohamedans in the Presidency, has not yet been published. To a question I put at the March session of the Council in this behalf, the reply was given that "the decision of Government on the recommendations of the Mohamedan Educational Committee will shortly be made public." The Director of Public Instruction has expressed the opinion, on the strength of the views of that committee, that a 'liberal system of scholarships for secondary education would do more for the Mohamedans as they stand at present than any other thing.' The Mohamedan public is naturally anxious to know what the recommendations of the committee are, and I have to request Government to lose no time in publishing its report.

In view of the backward condition of Mahomedan education, it is desirable that special encouragement should be given to Mahomedan students, to prosecute their studies in high schools. When compared with the other communities the number of Moslem students is disproportionately small, and the Mahomedan public would have been more pleased if a larger sum than Rs. 18,000 could have been made available for scholarships. I hope this matter will receive the serious attention of Government. I have already referred to the backwardness of Mahomedans in the matter of education, and nowhere is that backwardness more glaring and deplorable than in higher education. Mahomedan students who give up the school course, owing to various reasons, have to be attracted to high schools and colleges, and the way to do this is, in the first instance, to grant a large number of scholarships. Sir Mahomed Yusuf Sowdagar's munificent donation of Rs. 8 lakhs yet lies unutilized, and in reply to a question I asked in March last, I was told that at the instance of the donor the question has been allowed to stand over till the return to India of His Highness Sir Aga Khan. Is it not possible, I may ask, to expedite the matter and not to allow the large sum to remain unused? Pending the final decision and disposal of the amount of Rs. 8 lakhs, I suggest the interest on it may be utilized in granting scholarships to Moslem students prosecuting their studies in colleges. The need of such scholarships, it is superfluous to say, is extremely great, and I have respectfully to urge on Government the desirability of promoting the cause of higher education among Mahomedans by granting scholarships to them on a liberal scale.

Another subject, to which I have to refer, is in connection with the Urdu Training Class at Ahmedabad. I have been pressing this question on the attention of Government, for some time. The extra cost of adding a second year course to the Urdu class at Ahmedabad is trifling, and as the statement, supplied by Government in response to my request, shows it will not cost more than Rs. 14,000 a year if the class with a two years' course were to be transferred to Poona, one does not know what stands in the way of the carrying out of the scheme, when it is urgently called for in the interests of the progress of primary education among Mahomedans, and when the cost is not so great.

My lord, among the reforms which have got to be immediately taken up, the expansion of local self-government occupies a prominent place. The question of reform is already engaging the attention of your Excellency's Government and of the Council. It is well known that your Excellency takes a keen interest in the progress of local self-government, and the time has come when substantial measures of reform in this direction should be adopted. In this connection I have to draw the attention of the Council to an important aspect of this problem. All people will agree that the backward and smaller communities in the presidency should participate, in a reasonable measure, in the advancement of local self-government. But what is the present situation? The Mahomedans, who form by no means a small part of the population, have little share or voice in local self-government. Take the Poona City municipality for instance. Not one Mahomedan member has been elected as a councillor since the municipality came into existence.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—May I rise to a point of order, sir? The honourable member is discussing local self-government and not the budget.

The Honourable Mr. JAFFER:—I have to express my feelings of gratification that your Excellency's term of office has been extended. As I observe for a few weeks past we are passing through most anxious times and it is a matter of satisfaction to me that your Excellency's term has been extended. We also hope that all our anxieties will soon be allayed and that the arms of the allies will obtain complete victory.

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS:—Your Excellency,—I would like to refer to a few items in the budget for the current year.

Referring to the forest department, the revenue therefrom is mainly under two chief heads. On page 18 in the civil budget estimate the Council will see that to the estimated revenue of Rs. 52,30,000 there are two principal sub-heads (1) forest produce removed by Government estimated to yield Rs. 19,44,000 and (2) forest produce removed by consumers and purchasers estimated to yield Rs. 31,50,000. Against this, on page 85 of the civil budget estimate, we find the total expenditure on the forest department Rs. 29,46,000 which is 56·3 per cent. of the total forest revenue. This total expenditure is more or less equally divided under two main heads, viz., (A) conservancy and works and (H) establishments. The cost of removing forest produce departmentally under "A" is estimated at Rs. 8,48,000 against the receipts of Rs. 19,44,000, i. e., 43·62 per cent. The expenditure incurred under "A" for forest produce removed by consumers is estimated to be at Rs. 59,000 against estimated receipts of Rs. 31,50,000, i. e., 1·87 per cent.

The abovenamed percentages are roughly the same for the actuals of the year 1915-16, but, by courtesy of the Honourable the Finance Member, I have been supplied with figures of quantities of forest produce removed and sold by Government departmentally and sold to but removed by purchasers themselves for the year 1915-16.

Timber exploited departmentally was 10,81,374 c. ft., fetching Rs. 11,63,218 less expenditure Rs. 4,90,642 = net income Rs. 6,62,576, i. e., realizing Rs. 61·24 per 100 c. ft.

Timber exploited by other agency was 43,41,288 c. ft., fetching Rs. 18,37,620 less expenditure Rs. 58,909 = net income Rs. 17,78,711, i. e., realizing Rs. 40·96 per 100 c. ft.

Similarly figures for fuel work out as under:—

Government agency—quantity 43,31,932 c. ft., fetching Rs. 2,68,693 less expenditure Rs. 1,31,967 = net income Rs. 1,36,726, i.e., realizing Rs. 3·14 per 100 c. ft.

Other agency—quantity 3,20,75,769 c. ft., fetching Rs. 3,63,724, i. e., realizing Rs. 1·13 per 100 c. ft.

It thus appears that forest produce exploited departmentally is 50 to 175 per cent. more remunerative than if sold to outsiders for removal, unless qualities of the produce differ materially. Out of the total of 54½ lakhs c. ft. timber exploited, only 10·81 lakhs c. ft., i. e., 20 per cent., was exploited departmentally. As to fuel, the total quantity exploited is 3,64 lakhs c. ft., of which only 43·31 lakhs c. ft., i. e., about 14 per cent., was handled departmentally. In view of the large difference in prices realized, viz., 50 to 175 per cent. more, by departmental exploitation, it is desirable that more produce should be handled by the forest department. It is likely that increasing dearth of labour may be responsible for the much smaller departmental exploitation but I should think that in forest administration Government always have more facilities than private contractors.

The quantitative figures given above are most instructive and without these mere figures of revenue and expenditure may be misleading. The forest resources of India are practically unlimited and call for more careful attention from the Government than has been bestowed in the past. The full development and exploitation of timber lands alone would bring in a vastly increased revenue.

Modern methods, and tools similar to those used in Australia and Canada, should be brought in operation in view of the fact that an Indian requires to be educated in the proper use of such tools and saw mill machinery, for, at present, in most localities only the simplest local made implements are used. The conservatism of the Indian needs to be dealt with by tactful instruction, as he is an apt pupil if properly handled. I understand it has been demonstrated that an inexperienced Indian can be taught to accomplish with a cross-cut-saw better and quicker work than an experienced Indian with his ordinary axe.

The names of the various timbers need to be standardized, for, at present, every locality appears to have different names for exactly the same kind of wood and that causes a great amount of confusion. If uniformity in description is insisted upon, this disadvantage would be obviated before long.

The freight question is another very serious matter, for many fine forest areas remain neglected for want of co-operation between the railway and the contractor, with the result that the chief centres for the finished products require to import vast quantities from outside sources, and even railways are using such imported supplies. In this connection I note with pleasure the provision of Rs. 50,000 on page 6 of the revised financial statement, paragraph 13 IV, to elaborate a scheme most suitable for transport of forest produce in the Kanara district. The minor products of forests, such as resins, tans, gums, drugs and fibres, are of no small importance and the revenue from these could be increased to a vast extent under systematic supervision. I would suggest that the forest department should be divided into two main heads, viz., (1) conservancy and revenue and (2) development. I earnestly urge more money being spent on a systematic and scientific development of our forests with tools and implements of the latest model to the ultimate benefit of the state revenue and indigenous industries.

The second item I would like to refer to is the one of income tax. The actual collection under this head in 1915-16 was Rs. 73,32,639 with an expenditure of Rs. 1,71,853, i. e., 2·28 per cent. During the current year the collection is estimated at Rs. 2,01,97,000 against an expenditure of Rs. 2,09,000, i. e, 1·03 per cent. Of course, a good deal of the estimated increased revenue in the current year is due to the imperial revenue of Rs. 66,00,000 for super-tax, but, for this, I observe, no additional expenditure is budgetted.

In the revised financial statement of 1917-18 on page 8, paragraph 13C, the Honourable the Finance Member explains the reasons for the appointment of a second Income Tax Collector for Bombay entailing an expenditure of Rs. 9,000 per annum. I associate myself with the approval by Government of Mr. HARTLEY'S most useful work in the income-tax office in Bombay to such general satisfaction of the public as the collection of this tax permits of. We are told that Mr. HARTLEY has devised a scheme, evolved from a change recently introduced in the system of administration in the large mofussil trading centres. The scheme is said to have been attended with extraordinary success, having resulted, practically, in all the towns visited, in an immediate increase of nearly 100 per cent. in the assessment. I would however not judge the change in the system of administration in the mofussil trade centres from the cent. per cent. rise in assessment only. It is very necessary to see whether it has given any general relief to the assessees there, in the direction where the same may be needed.

Being a direct tax, the income tax has always been the most unpopular of all the forms of taxation. I am not unaware of the reluctance of some to give correct returns of their incomes but the method of assessment and the personnel of the staff collecting the tax in the mofussil are by no means perfect. The latter is the usual revenue staff of the district from the mamlatdar to the collector, and this leaves scope for the public suspecting unnecessary annoyance in many cases.

What with the increased and graduated scales of taxation and the new super-tax to be assessed I would urge Government to ensure the assessment being equitable. No increase in expenditure to this end will, I am sure, be grudged by this Council.

The Income Tax Act is, I understand, on the anvil of the Government of India, and it is to be hoped that provision will be made for an appeal to a court of law. In the meantime I would ask for such provision of staff as will ensure considerably less dissatisfaction in the assessment and collection of this tax. The complaints from the mofussil are many and persistent and refuse to believe that they are all unfounded or frivolous.

The Honourable Mr. PANDURANG ANANT DESAI:—Your Excellency,—I congratuate the Honourable the Finance Member on the successful budget which he has presented this morning to this Council. The budget was submitted to the Government of India and it has been sanctioned in all its details. Under these circumstances it might be asked what was the use of a discussion about the budget when both the items of revenue and expenditure cannot be altered? I submit the object of the discussion is to throw out suggestions and cautions to Government which, if they appeal to them, would be accepted by the members of the finance committee and by the Honourable the Finance Member at the time of the framing of the next year's budget.

We are thankful to Government for the provision of Rs. 6,000 for the appointment of an inspectress of schools for the Southern Division. Female education is in a backward condition in the Southern Division, especially in the Karnatic part of the Southern Division, and such an appointment is welcome to every body. But having regard to the duties which are to be performed by the inspectress, namely, that she shall have to get into close touch with the ladies of the province, she must be an Indian lady because she must understand the vernaculars, namely, Canarese and Marathi, so as to impress on the minds of the Indian ladies the desirability of female education and to shake off as much as possible the apathy which prevails among the Indian ladies in sending their children to schools. At the same time the inspectress must know the manners, the customs and the habits of the people among whom she shall have to move. I therefore suggest that the appointment should be made of a suitable Indian lady for this purpose.

Then we are also glad that in this year's budget an amount of Rs. 6,290 has been sanctioned for the revision of pay of gymnastic teachers. The increase is welcome. But what I suggest is that it should be applied all at once. We had a similar allotment about a couple of years ago which remained unspent for two years. I hope Government will apply this provision at once towards the object for which it has been set apart

Then, my lord, I should like to make a few suggestions with respect to the amount of Rs. 85,000 out of the allotment made by the Government of India out of the wheat scheme. The Honourable the Finance Member has said that Rs. 65,000 out of this amount have been already appropriated. The remainder is Rs. 85,000. Now out of this sum of Rs. 85,000, I submit some portion may be spent for the needs of the backward district of Bijapur from which I come. The district of Bijapur is purely agricultural. Except a few cotton factories in the town of Bijapur and also in the town of Bagalkot, the whole of the population depends entirely upon agriculture; and Government knows that labour is becoming scarce now and that coolies who could be secured for three or four annas per day cannot be secured unless we offer seven or eight annas per day. The other difficulty for these agriculturists living in rural areas is that workmen from the rural areas are running to the big towns and there is much scarcity of labour in the rural areas. Under these circumstances the cultivators find it very difficult to get men to cultivate and improve their lands. I therefore suggest that a steam plough out of this amount of Rs. 85,000, which is at the disposal of Government, and which it is considered should be applied only to the needs of agriculturists, should be purchased and placed at the disposal of the Bijapur district for the use of these cultivators. I am told by my honourable friend, Rao Bahadur NAIK, that a steam plough which has been given to the Ranebennur taluka is working well. I submit under these circumstances that our demand for a similar steam plough for the needs of the cultivators of the Bijapur district would not be considered by Government as an unreasonable one.

Another thing, as I have said, is that as the Bijapur district is a purely agricultural one, we must look to the breed of cattle. Cattle are deteriorating in the district of Bijapur and I hope Government will give some portion of this amount of Rs. 85,000 for the establishment of a cattle farm at Bijapur as they have proposed to do in the town of Sholapur this year.

As regards the balances, the closing balance is Rs. 2,59,31,000. The revenue estimates are Rs. 8,02,34,000 and expenditure estimates Rs. 7,86,74,000. The estimates thus exhibit a surplus of Rs. 15,60,000. I submit, your Excellency, that it is not a desirable state of things that we must have a big surplus in the provincial revenue. If our opening balance was Rs. 2,42,21,000, I submit we ought not to have left this surplus of Rs. 15,60,000 in this year's budget. We should have thought that some of the amount, at least Rs. 5,00,000, would have been appropriated to the needs of the province, namely, education, sanitation and such other things, but we see pains taken to have this big surplus included in the Rs. 2,59,31,000, the closing balance for the second year's budget.

Now as regards the expenditure on account of the police I fully endorse the remarks made by my honourable friend, Mr. KAMAT. He has clearly given to you the figures for the last 4 or 5 years. I have got the figures of 1907 and you will see that in the year 1907 the expenditure on account of this head, namely police, is Rs. 76,41,000. In the present year it has increased to Rs. 1,12,49,000. Thus in the space of 10 years you will see that the increase has gone up by more than 50 per cent. This is certainly disconcerting, and I submit that steps should soon be taken to curtail this expenditure on account of police. Now, your Excellency will see that the administration report last year shows that the work then done was this that the cases undetected rose by 1,141. That clearly shows that the percentage has risen from 37·8 to 39·1 undetected cases. In the same way property stolen and unrecovered rose to 4·43. The value of the property rose from Rs. 4,01,000 to Rs. 4,16,000. So, while expenditure is increasing there is an increase in undetected offences and also in property unrecovered. Under the circumstances I submit that steps should be taken to curtail expenditure on this head.

Then as regards the excise policy of Government, I think that it is not desirable. The excise revenue of 1913-1914 was Rs. 2,22,59,000: in the current year's budget it is Rs. 2,56,00,000. This shows that in 4 years the increase rose by 15 per cent. Your Excellency, I think this state of things is not desirable. This clearly shows that drunkenness is increasing and steps should be taken to see that this is checked. The proper remedy in my opinion about this is that we should try to reduce the number of shops of liquor and toddy as much as possible.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—May I interrupt the honourable member? Is he talking of revenue or consumption?

The Honourable Mr. DESAI:—What I submit is that the revenue has increased by 15 per cent. during the last 4 years. It is not a satisfactory feature. The proper remedy I think is to reduce the number of shops and have strong local excise committees. This will be proper and effective.

Then the next point which I should like to touch is about magisterial fines. Your Excellency might see on page 23 of the budget estimates that for 1916-17 the estimated amount of fines was Rs. 4,25,724, while in 1917-18 it is estimated at Rs. 4,81,000; the increase is by 13 per cent. Your Excellency, the fines which are inflicted on culprits by magistrates ought not to be looked upon as a source of income. Last year as I had submitted the income on this was Rs. 4,25,724. Now, this year it has increased to Rs. 4,81,000. Now this increase in the estimate means an invitation to magistrates and judges to inflict fines on culprits which I submit is most undesirable and the suggestion is made that in future the estimates should not be increased. Because, if the estimates are increased, the magistrates think that the budget shows the increases and therefore the fines would be increased upon the culprits. The effect of this is this. A fine is imposed upon a culprit; he has to suffer if he is not able to pay it, in addition to the imprisonment, for his failure to pay the fine; and even if he suffers the penalty for the failure to pay the fine, his property is not exempt from liability. It is still liable to be attached and sold in satisfaction of this debt. So I submit, under the circumstances, that care should be taken not to increase this item thinking that it is a source of income. With these remarks I resume my seat.

The Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI SAMALDAS MEHTA:—Your Excellency,—When last year I pleaded for a larger grant for the work of the Indigenous Industries Committee, we had no idea that even this small provision made last year for this purpose would be discontinued this year and that the activities of the committee would now cease for some time at least. This is one of the results of the present war, to help the successful prosecution of which Government have requisitioned the services of Sir Thomas Holland. As a result, the Industrial Commission has had to suspend its sittings for the time being. It was felt by the Local Industries Committee that until the Government of India laid down their policy in connection with the development of Indian industries after a consideration of the Holland Commission's report, very little practical work could be done by it and it was decided to suspend its activities for the present. While this is generally true for most indigenous industries, there is one branch thereof, which may well be taken up even now by the Local Government,—I mean the forest industries. If the services of a forest economist like Mr. Pearson were obtained from the Government of India and the work of starting industries based on forest products entrusted to him, it is very likely that good progress will be made in connection with them within a year or two. There is reason to believe that the members of the Commission are considering whether they should begin their work next cold weather and submit their report as early as possible. If your Excellency's Government is consulted we hope it will vote in favour of the Commission bringing its work to a close as soon as may be practicable under the existing circumstances.

In last year's revised budget there is a provision of Rs. 500 for experiments in connection with the manufacture of chloride of magnesium from bitterns. If the results of these experiments are published in such a manner that they can be known by business men they will prove very useful to those interested in that or other similar industries.

It was in 1914 that the then Finance Member, referring to the scheme for the improvement of the subordinate revenue staff, said: "The lower appointments on Rs. 15 are being reduced and the money so saved is being utilised to raise the remaining appointments of Rs. 15 to Rs. 20. This improvement will continue as quickly as it can be carried out, etc." In the July session of the Council I suggested that this reform should be expedited and that the 705 men who were then drawing Rs. 15 would be given a promotion of Rs. 5. This was before the commencement of this war: the prices of food stuff, etc., had not then gone up to the extent that they have now. On the other hand the number of clerks drawing Rs. 15 per month has been reduced from 705 to 133. On behalf of these low paid clerks I appeal to your Excellency's Government to raise their salaries to a minimum of Rs. 20. The extra expenditure will be only Rs. 634 per month and this amount can easily be found by reappropriation.

May I congratulate Government on having accepted my suggestions made last year for larger grants for the construction and repairs of chowdis and also for providing a larger sum for sowing and planting operations under forests. I hope a regular scheme of reafforestation will be drawn up by the conservator of forests and funds provided by the Honourable the Finance Member for carrying it out.

The educational conference held in Bombay last month adopted a resolution which, while thanking Government and the University for establishing a college of commerce and degree in commerce, expressed regret that the Sydenham College had not yet a building of its own nor had a permanent staff beyond the principal and the vice-principal. It is three years since the college was established and the first batch of students have completed their course, and yet the college cannot be said to have been put on a footing of permanency. It is high time that a site be selected for the college and that the Lord Sydenham Endowment Fund be used to build a suitable building for it. Out of six professors, four are half-time men and the remaining two, though full-time men, are not on the permanent staff and one of these may, if not made permanent, leave the college as soon as a better post is offered him. It is a recognised fact that a permanent staff takes a greater interest in its work than a temporary one and in the interest of the students of the institution it is necessary to revise carefully the present arrangements and put the institution on a permanent footing. This will not necessarily involve heavy extra expenditure, for the full-time men will be able to give more time to teaching work and so the extra cost will be nominal.

The budgetted expenditure of the Sydenham College has been put down at Rs. 87,000, because the contributions made by the public bodies and the interest on the endowment fund are not deducted from the total cost—usually contributions are so deducted in other instances—and it will be interesting to know the reason why that procedure is not followed in the present case as a result of which, a much higher figure than the amount actually spent by the Government is shown in the budget. If the contributions as well as the income from the fees were deducted, the net cost of conducting the college would, on the basis of this year's budget, come to Rs. 25,000. It is not higher than what is spent by Government in other Presidencies on commercial education though in no other Presidency is there a college of commerce preparing candidates for a university degree in commerce.

The figure for additional grants to local boards for the opening of new primary schools (vide page 193) is about 2 lakhs more than that of the last year. This probably is due to the policy referred to in item J, page 11, of the financial statement. Government are to be congratulated for making this provision as well as for providing Rs. 2,50,000 for improving the pay and training of teachers in primary and secondary schools from the recurring assignments out of the imperial revenues. This shows that Government have at least recognised that even the prosecution of the war should not be allowed to interfere with the work of the extension of primary and secondary education, which was originally stopped on the beginning of the war. The Council would like to know if any scheme has been prepared for the utilization of the amounts, for, if this is not done, it is possible that a greater portion of these amounts will lapse and there may be a difficulty in getting the Government of India to agree to our using the lapsed grants in the next year. If any scheme is prepared, it may be laid on the Council table for the information of the members.

The want of trained teachers has been alleged to be one of the reasons why the progress of primary education has been much slower than what it would otherwise have been. This defect can only be remedied by starting more training colleges for men and women teachers. If for financial or other reasons Government are not prepared to do so, they should adopt the other alternative of helping, by liberal grants-in-aid, private bodies, which undertake to open normal classes. The Council is perhaps aware that the Seva Sadan both in Bombay and Poona have opened such classes. I believe, one municipality has got the sanction of the Director of the Public Instruction to start a first year's normal class and that one class has been opened by that officer to train up teachers for local board primary schools. Many more such institutions must be started in all parts of the Presidency, if the rate of progress of primary education is to go on increasing to meet the public demand for the same.

Under the same head sub-head, supplies and services (page 194), the provision for text-book and library charges has been reduced from Rs. 6,437 in 1915-16 and Rs. 3,738 in 1916-17 to Rs. 5,000 only. In the ordinary course of things this figure should go on increasing and it is difficult to find out the reason for this reduction. There is no provision for expenses in connection with the demonstration of moral lessons (page 201). Are we justified in understanding that Government have given up the idea of giving direct moral instruction to students? If so, Government deserve all praise for this change of policy.

On page 217 there is a provision of about Rs. 80,000 more for grants to local and municipal hospitals and dispensaries. This is over and above the amount of Rs. 20,000 provided for new dispensaries referred to in item (N), page 12 of the financial statement. Government have done well in having realised that in matters educational and those relating to the extension of medical relief, the usual progress should not be retarded on account of financial stringency caused by war conditions.

When the Anti-Tuberculosis League was started and Mr. Ratan Tata (now Sir Ratan Tata) took the initiative of agreeing to pay Rs. 15,000 per year for this object, the idea was to fight this fell disease in this city on organised scientific lines. It was expected that the mill-owners, whose workmen perhaps suffer the most from the ravages of this disease and whose duty and even self interest would prompt them to assist the cause, would give annual donations from their companies' profits and that the Municipality and Government would give large annual grants. Owing to the articles of association of the mill companies not permitting the agents to make grants for such a cause, the whole scheme has to be cut down and the league is not able to fight the disease as it ought to be fought and as it was expected. May I appeal to your Excellency's Government to take up this question in right earnest and after securing the co-operation of the mill-owners and others, carry on the work on lines similar to those adopted in London about which, I believe, Colonel Evans has written a very useful and valuable report. I am confident that if the matter receives the support of Her Excellency Lady Willingdon, the difficulty of providing means for the league will practically disappear. The bad supply of milk is said to be one of the chief factors in conveying tubercular infection and it is gratifying to see that a beginning has been made to solve this difficulty by taking up the question of the milk-supply of one place—the city of Poona—and that Rs. 5,000 have been provided for the purpose. If the experiments now being carried on in Poona turn out successful, it is to be hoped that this work will be extended to other big cities.

From the note accompanying the detailed budget, it seems that out of the imperial grant of Rs. 1,50,000 from wheat profits, Rs. 65,000 have been allotted to different objects, leaving a balance of Rs. 85,000 in the hands of Government. If the grant is not earmarked by the Imperial Government for agricultural improvement, may I suggest that the amount be allotted to sanitation and used for improving village sanitation. If it is so earmarked, I suggest that the amount may be utilised in promotion of various forms of agricultural co-operation. I desire particularly to emphasise the need for the organization of the co-operative sale of cotton and other agricultural produce, and I should also like to invite the attention of Government to the encouragement of seed unions of the type found so useful in the Central Provinces and Berar.

Last year Rs. 5,000 were provided for the development of the sugar-cane industry on new canals. As there is no figure against this item (page 251) in the revised estimate of 1916-17 nor any provision made in this year's budget, I asked the Chief Secretary if this item had been dropped. It seems from his reply—and I am thankful to the Honourable Mr. CADELL for his courtesy in replying to my queries about the budget figures—that this sum is merged in the provision for experimental farms. It will be interesting to know the results of these experiments.

The agricultural department is to be congratulated for carrying on the work of introducing American cotton in Sind in spite of the difficulties owing to people mixing American cotton with Sindhi and passing it off as pure American. If the experiments prove that the margin between the two cottons will continue at the highest percentage of 66⅔ (page 3 of the annual report) and if the Sindhi cultivator will agree to bring unadulterated American cotton into the market, there seems to be every possibility American cotton being largely introduced in Sind. It is also to be wished that the cattle farms at Sholapur and near Karachi for which Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 20,000 have respectively been provided in this year's budget will help to improve the breed and thus assist agriculture which is our main industry and whose success for years to come will depend upon good plough-cattle.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I think perhaps we had better adjourn now till three o'clock.

The Council then adjourned for lunch.

After lunch.

The Council re-assembled at 3 p. m.

The Honourable Mr. RAGHUNATH PURSHOTTAM PARANJPYE:—Your Excellency,—I wish only to refer to one point in connection with this budget, and that is with regard to the change of policy which Government have recently made in the matter of retirements owing to superannuation. The matter is not of very small importance because we find even in the figures that are given to us that superannuation allowances and pensions have been continually increasing during the last two years. Between the accounts for 1915-16 and the budget for this year there is a difference of Rs. 72,000 and I am inclined to think that this great increase is to a very great extent due to the change of policy of the Government, and I put it to your Excellency's Government and the members of this Council whether in these times of financial stringency this change of policy is quite advisable. In olden days, and in fact in the civil service regulations by which I understand this Government is also bound, the regulation was:—"An officer who has attained the age of 55 may be required to retire by the Local Government under which he is employed. The Local Government may delegate this power in respect of non-gazetted officers to the head of the latter's office or department, not being under the rank of a collector or district judge." And later on we are told that in every case in which the rule is enforced, the reasons for enforcing it should be recorded; and the Government of Bombay in accordance with this rule in 1912 had issued a notice like this:—

"No officer is to be obliged to apply for pension under the 55 years' rule, unless the head of the department is satisfied of his unfitness for further duty and until he has had an opportunity afforded him of appealing against the view taken of his unfitness." That was the policy of Government till some years ago, but during the last one or two years the policy appears to have been entirely altered. Under recent orders of the Government of Bombay—I do not find any justification for them in the civil service regulations—"Recommendations for extensions of service after the age of 55 years should not be made, unless there are cogent reasons for holding that the public interest will be prejudicially affected if the officers concerned are compelled to retire," so that, to put it in a few words, while we may say that a few years ago it was a valve opening one way, now it is a valve opening the other way. Formerly everybody practically continued in service if he wanted; now everybody retired unless he is made an exception. I do not know what reasons there are for this change of policy. I myself think that ordinarily Government should continue the service of a man if he is fit to continue his service and to discharge his duties satisfactorily. I know there is a feeling among a large section of the public that these extensions should not be given to a great extent. That feeling is due to the fact that people want more openings in Government service, and if, therefore, people are not allowed any extensions, there will be so many more opportunities for others to get into Government service. I think, however, that this is not an attitude which Government and this Council, which has got to be responsible for the budget of this Presidency, should adopt. It ought to see how economy can best be effected. It ought to see that no unnecessary expenditure is incurred by Government. Now this pension after retirement, after all, is a waste of money from the public point of view. Although it is very well earned, if it can be avoided, I think it is the bounden duty of every Government to avoid it. If a person is quite efficient to serve after 55, I think Government and the public ought to congratulate themselves on their getting the services of the man without having to pay him the pension—a charge which does not bring in any adequate return. I do not wish to make extension compulsory. I do not want to increase this age limit of 55 if a man does not want to continue in service. I want to give him an opportunity to retire even at the age of 50, if he likes, under certain reasonable conditions, but this matter of compulsory retirement at 55 is, I think, quite suicidal from the Government point of view and from the point of view of the public. In these days of financial stringency in particular this is an exceedingly short-sighted policy. While we are economising on all heads, we are wasting money with open hands by thousands and even by lakhs. I am not able to give figures. Although I tried to find out from the accountant general's office how many retirements there would be this year on account of the 55 age limit, I was not supplied with this information and therefore I am afraid I shall have to speak in general terms; but I am certain that these retirements are costing the public treasury more than a lakh of rupees certainly.

Now, as I have said, Government is economising in every direction. In answer to a question that I asked, Government have told us that all trained teachers in primary schools are not paid the full face value of their certificates, and I enquired also what would be the additional cost to the public treasury if every primary teacher is given his minimum code pay and I am told that it will cost only Rs. 25,138 if this simple reform is effected. Now I myself think that if only Government would allow those of its servants who want it to continue in service even for a single year more, without causing the slightest hardship to anybody, I think this justifiable grievance of primary teachers could be very easily remedied. Well, after all, if the interests of the public service are not injuriously affected, I do not know why this retirement at 55 should be made compulsory. We should look to the interests of the Government servants themselves. We always find that at the age of 55 it is difficult for a man to obtain employment in any new sphere. I do not wish to retain a man if he is incompetent, but if he is competent, I want to take into account the interests of a man who is compelled to retire.

Now take the case of low paid servants of Government, schoolmasters in primary schools, for instance. They are paid very little and their pension allowance is only Rs. 5. Now what is a man to do on Rs. 5? He is probably not able to save anything, how then is he going to maintain himself on his pension allowance of Rs. 5 per month? He has probably a few children to bring up, and in these days of increased prices I think it is absolutely impossible for a man to maintain himself on this small allowance of Rs. 5. If, therefore, he has strength enough to continue in service, I do not think Government is justified in turning him out and telling him we do not want to continue your service, you were born 55 years ago." In the case of these primary school teachers I might say it is not only that these teachers do not get their code pay, but a great many of these teachers do not get even the full face-value of their certificates. You find that everybody is talking of dearness of labour. You find even an ordinary day labourer earning more money than a salaried teacher in a primary school under Government or local boards. I ask Government if this is a desirable state of things. The state of things could be remedied if only people are allowed to continue in service for a few years more, without increasing the grant for education.

A few years ago I was reading a very interesting book of reminiscences by Mrs. Ranade. In that book she tells a story of one of the uncles of the late Mr. Justice Ranade. There happened to be issued in his district a rule that all people had to retire at a certain age. Then that man one day went to the house of his superior and was seen, when the superior came out, carrying a very big stone on his head. The superior asked him what he meant by carrying such a big stone on his head. He replied: "I want to show you in a practical manner that I am not an inefficient person, that I have got full strength to serve for several years more, and I therefore do not want to retire under the superannuation rules." I therefore put it to Government whether this policy is right in ordinary times and whether it is right in these particular days of financial stringency. Without doing injustice to anybody, I may say that I know, of course, that every junior officer wishes his senior officer to retire or die, but I do not know whether we should encourage this uncharitable view of the junior servants of Government. At any rate, I think Government ought to get a proper return for the money they are spending and I do not think they should increase the non-effective charges if the same can be avoided. I know there is a feeling that the extensions are likely to lead to some abuses, but I say that if the extensions are likely to become the rule, then there are not likely to be any abuses. Superior officers ought to give a written opinion that such and such a man is inefficient and that should be held a sufficient ground for compulsory retirement. Under the old rules, after 60 a man is required to retire unless the interests of the public service are likely to suffer by his retirement. Now I think practically what Government has done is that they have changed the age from 60 to 55. Government is, therefore, coming in for a large expenditure under these superannuation allowances.

The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS:—Your Excellency,—I get up at this stage to offer a few remarks, especially in view of the remarks made by my honourable friend Mr. PARANJPYE, because I take very strong exception to those remarks. I think he is proceeding entirely upon a false basis and false logic. He thinks that the rule of 55 years' limit in public services should not be observed because, according to him, people are quite fit to work on after 55 years and he appeals especially to the financial stringency existing in war time, although he extends his remarks a little bit further towards the end by saying that that should ordinarily also be the rule. But, your Excellency, I think that instead of it being real economy it will be entirely false economy. To begin with, for ages together 55 years has been recognised to be the limit up to which people are considered to be fit for work in Government service and upto now there has been no complaint against it. Now I say that if that has been the limit recognised on all hands as proper, then until a regular procedure has been followed to alter it, it would be entirely a wrong principle to let that limit work loosely in the manner suggested by my honourable friend. It may be that there are exceptional cases like the one that is quoted by the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE in which people are quite fit to work after 55. There is no wonder in that. These exceptional cases exist and are taken cognizance of by Government as illustrated by him that in various instances Government have been pleased to extend the term of those who have completed their 55 years. But so far as my own experience and opinion is concerned, I have strongly objected, wherever it has been possible, to even the grant of these extensions. They work a good deal of injustice. The whole chain of subordinates who come after the recipients of extensions feel it a grievance that these men whom they expected to retire and in whose place they were to get promotion, lose it by these extensions. Then, if an extension is given on right or wrong principles, there is always a complaint that the man getting it is the favourite of a particular officer and that it is favouritism and jobbery which are the real cause of extensions. Now, as a question of principle, it will be recognised that those people who make a grievance of these extensions are perfectly justified in doing so. I daresay when the exigencies of service require it, or when a man is considered to be specially competent and exceptionally fit for a particular post which could not be filled up with equal efficiency by any other man, there would be valid ground for an exception being made. But to say on the part of Mr. PARANJPYE that although the limit is there the limit should be allowed to work so loosely that it may be open to any officer to give extensions to any one up to any limit is really surprising as in that case we shall not know where we are. Next why I say that it is not true but false economy is that it will impair the efficiency of service. The public for whom these officers are ruling will greatly suffer, moreover men coming from countries where there is greater longevity than in India are subject to this rule. Further I think that instead of doing any good to the public servants who come under the operation of this rule, Mr. PARANJPYE'S suggestion will be doing them harm, because I can very easily realise that there will be innumerable instances of men who would like to retire at the age of 55 after having worked hard all those years. It is not right to say that at 55 they go without any employment. The whole principle of pensions is that a man who gets pay has to save something and that on retirement his savings are supplemented by the pension he gets. I think the system in existence for ages and ages has worked satisfactorily and that it has a good deal of justice, common sense and logic in it. If, however, the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE is right and I am wrong that a large majority are fit to continue in service after 55, then as a matter of fact, the proper procedure for him to adopt would be to bring forward a resolution in this Council and let that resolution run the gauntlet of public opinion in this Council, and if the majority in this Council think that the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE is right, then let a particular limit be fixed; but that limit should not be worked loosely even then as suggested by the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE, but should be adhered to strictly.

I told your Excellency that I got up because I took strong exception to the remarks of the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE. I have done in that regard. I have to supplement these remarks by a reference to a point that may be said to be properly connected with the budget so far as my own province of Sind is concerned. Now, although I might be offending against the principle of economy that the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE has so strenuously put forward, I think he will agree that though my suggestion is one for additional expenditure, it should be quite welcome. We find that the prices of food-stuffs have enormously affected the public, more especially have they affected the menial establishments of Government and other departments. I have great pleasure in informing your Excellency that to compensate for same certain local bodies in the province of Sind like the Port Trust and the municipality have, on the application of their menial establishments, granted enhancements to them in the shape of local or temporary allowances. But I am sorry to find that whilst Government ought to have taken a lead in the matter, they have lagged behind and some of the proposals of our municipalities are hung up until Government have granted sanction to these enhancements, temporarily it may be, to their menial staff. I think every member of this Council will agree with me that the persons who are most hard hit are the members of the lower departments of Government and local bodies. Whilst on the one hand the general public have suffered on account of the rise, they have also benefitted on the other. For instance, if we take the case of labourers, we find that they have vastly benefitted by the rise in their wages so that they are more than compensated for the loss they have sustained. That is not the case with peons and I have heard complaints from lots of quarters. Therefore I appeal to your Excellency most earnestly that your Excellency's Government will see their way to grant allowances to Government departments for the menial establishments on account of the rise in the price of food stuffs. I think the proposals which we, the Karachi municipality, sent forward to Government for sanction have not probably yet been sanctioned, because Government have not granted their own staff such allowances. That is rather hard lines on the people, and if that be so, I most earnestly appeal to your Excellency to consider this matter favourably.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur GANESH KRISHNA SATHE:—Your Excellency,—During the discussion of this budget I want to refer to one branch of the administration, namely, the judicial branch. As one who has been a legal practitioner you may take it that I really can appreciate the delay that is occurring in the disposal of suits and appeals in the different courts of the Presidency. The suggestions which I want to make are three. One is that the cadre of judicial officers, particularly, of assistant judges and subordinate judges requires a great increase. The second point of mine is that our courts were allocated about the year 1880 and even before that time; and therefore, looking to the rise in the number of suits and appeals the question of their allocation needs to be considered and as well as also their territorial jurisdiction. And my third point is that if Government is making a profit, i. e., if Government is getting more on the head of court-fees during the last 10 years, the figures of which I would presently quote, then there is no reason why Government should not consider this question of giving additional staff to the judicial administration on the civil side. This is a question which I think will have to be substantiated by quoting figures and as the question of figures comes in, the reading of it becomes wearisome but as I intend to make out a strong case on the point, I only beg of my honourable friends to do me the favour of listening to my figures for about 5 or 7 minutes. The increase is noticeable both in the number of original cases as well as in the number of appeals before the courts.

In the subordinate judges' courts there has been an increase of 25 per cent. in the number of suits instituted (88,354 in 1907 to 110,269 in 1914), 33 per cent. in the number of suits for disposal before the court (120,112 in 1907 to 158,171 in 1914) and 63 per cent. in the number of suits pending at the close of the year (27,813 in 1907 to 44,024 in 1914).

The average duration in days of a civil suit in these courts has risen by 12 per cent. in the case of contested suits and by 28 per cent. in that of uncontested ones.

I now come to the second branch, namely, provincial courts of Small Causes.

In the provincial courts of Small Causes which are situated at three different places, namely, Poona, Ahmedabad and Surat, the number of suits instituted has risen by 63 per cent. (8,203 in 1907 to 13,427 in 1914). The number of suits for disposal by 60 per cent. (10,081 in 1907 to 16,287 in 1914). The number of suits pending at the close of the year by 88 per cent. (1,783 in 1907 to 3,250 in 1914).

Then if we come to the next tribunal, namely, district courts, we find that—in the district courts the institution of fresh suits has risen by 50 per cent. (847 in 1907 to 1,222 in 1914). The number of suits for disposal shows a commensurate rise but the number of suits pending at the close of the year has risen by 66 per cent. (594 in 1907 to 1,026 in 1914). Miscellaneous cases in these courts have gone down by .22 per cent. (3,140 in 1907 to 2,487 in 1914)."

In the High Court—it may interest my Bombay friends—the institution of fresh suits has risen by 130 per cent. (1,054 in 1907 to 2,377 in 1914). The number of suits for disposal by 48 per cent. (3,105 in 1907 to 4,629 in 1914) and the number of suits pending at the close of the year by 53 per cent. (1,521 in 1907 to 2,320 in 1914).

Then I come to the next point. Up to now I have dealt with original suits pending in the sub-judge's court, in the district courts and in the High Court. Coming to the question of appeals, in the district courts the number of regular appeals for disposal have risen by 37 per cent. (8,113 in 1907 to 11,188 in 1914). Coming to the appeals pending in the High Court we find that both regular and miscellaneous appeals have risen, the formerby 12 per cent. (2,404 in 1907 to 2,715 in 1914), and the latter by 109 per cent. (77 in 1907 to 161 in 1914). The number of appeals pending has risen in the case of regular appeals by 50 per cent. (1,045 in 1907 to 1,582 in 1914) and in the case of miscellaneous appeals by 136 per cent. (25 in 1907 to 55 in 1914). Now these statistics would conclusively show that from the year 1907 to 1914 there is a rise in the number of suits and appeals all over. I have selected the years 1907 and 1914 not because they suited me but to shorten the work of giving figures in this Council, but I may say that for all the years from 1907 there is a steady rise both in the number of regular suits and appeals. Now in addition to these figures there is strong evidence in the papers of Government that there is a rise of the character which I am discussing. Certain courts in the mofussil require assistance. Those courts were 21 in 1907, now they are 37 in 1914. Even with this liberal assistance, which has been given by Government from time to time, officers were not able to reduce congestion, and I may state for the information of some of the members here who are non-lawyers that delays in litigation mean much. They vastly increase the costs; they keep litigants in a state of anxious uncertainty and they prejudice their interest in various ways and furthermore if people pay for the litigation which they launch in courts, is it not reasonable and legitimate of them to expect that they should get speedy decision at the hands of the court started by Government?

Now, there is one more argument which I want to develop for making out a case for additional establishment and it is this. If we look to the figures of collection and charges which I have taken from the administration reports for the three years of 1907, 1911 and 1914, the collections in 1907 were Rs. 36,49,123, in 1911, Rs. 42,77,373 and in 1914 they were Rs. 50,86,940, an increase of nearly 39 per cent. Taking the income from court-fees realized during the last 5 years,—I will not quote all figures, I will only quote figures for 1911-12, and 1916-17—they were Rs. 38,78,656 and Rs. 49,45,000 respectively. Now comparing these figures, which show that there is an increase even in the income from court-fees, and looking to the steady rise of litigation in various courts and looking to the fact that this litigation is not disposed of with such speed as one ought to expect, my earnest prayer to your Excellency is that this is a department (which is controlled by two authorities, namely, your Excellency's Government and the High Court), which requires thorough sifting. So it seems to me that in case your Excellency's Government is satisfied from the figures which I have quoted that there is a real case for an increase in the cadre of the judicial officers, then the earlier some steps are taken the better.

I will only suggest one or two remedies for reducing the congestion without increasing the cost. In the four Deccan districts, where the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act was first introduced, we have not got any provincial Small Causes court and the procedure prescribed by that act for money suits between non-agriculturists is very lengthy and there is no reason why these courts should not be invested with provincial Small Causes court's powers. This subject received consideration at the hands of your Excellency's Government when a draft bill was circulated in 1914 when it was intended to amend the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act. We have not heard anything about this but with a view to reduce this congestion I think it will be for the good of the litigants if this change can be introduced early. Another point or another direction, in which I want to make a suggestion, is that in the provincial Small Causes courts we have got the office of registrars whose jurisdiction extends now up to Rs. 20. They are all recruited from the services and they are generally bachelors of law and in their case I do not see any reason why their jurisdiction should not be increased to Rs. 50. I make these suggestions with the view that these alterations and improvements would, to a certain extent, reduce the congestion without casting any additional burden on Government. No doubt in addition to these remedies certain new appointments will have to be created to cope with the increase in work, and I find from the financial statements supplied to us from year to year that Government is maintaining temporary establishments costing something like Rs. 65,000 a year. If this temporary establishment is being required year after year from 1908 up to to-day, then I do not really understand why Government should not take up the question and sift the whole question from top to bottom and see whether really a change is required. I think the administration of justice is a matter in which we are all interested and it is one in which the public are very keenly interested and it has been said very often that the first thing that the judicial administration should attempt to do is to avoid delays and I think your Excellency's Government can very well find out ways and means as to how far this delay can be avoided. With these words I resume my seat.

The Honourable Sardar SHRINIWAS COOPOOSWAMY MUDLIAR:—Your Excellency, I wish to make a few remarks with reference to the budget; but before proceeding further I beg to add my humble voice of congratulation with the rest of the Presidency, at the extension granted to our President.

I beg leave to tender our congratulations to the honourable member in charge of this portfolio, for the consideration and care he has taken in framing the budget, especially at a time when the financial cart has to be driven so carefully owing to the devastation due to this unprecedented war thrust upon us by the Huns.

I need hardly conceal the fact, my lord, that some of my suggestions will be such that your Government will not be able to adopt during the coming year; but my object in mentioning them now is to hope that the honourable member may be able to consider them in his next budget and on the occasion of framing which, I hope, we shall have come out fully victorious.

The Honourable Sir RICHARD LAMB in the financial speech, when replying on a budget framed in the year 1915, was good enough to agree that the income from assessment upon building-land in municipal areas should go into the coffers of the municipalities, as a contribution from Government, in order to assist the municipalities in discharging their obligations. But up to now, I regret to have to say that the matter has not received any consideration and I trust that the importance of that proposal will not be lost sight of by your Government upon framing the next year's budget.

Of the many reforms introduced by the Government, I am glad to observe that the system of supplying implements for demonstration purposes to agriculturists in villages has proved very successful and one cannot help observing the very useful work that is being done in this regard for the benefit of the agriculturists who are the backbone of the country. Let me further hope that the Finance Member will always continue his liberal grant under this head. It is also very gratifying to note that out of the sum of Rs. 1,50,000 from the non-recurring assignment made by the Government of India, the sum of Rs. 65,000 has been proposed to be spent on agriculture. This amount is really being spent upon a deserving cause, which must to a large extent lead to increasing the prosperous condition of the country.

As regards the licensing of liquor and toddy shops, due respect and regard should be given to public opinion and I am sorry to remark that that is not always done. Many of the useful suggestions made by the temperance associations, that have been formed as a sort of guide to the department, are not heeded. There should at least be a rule laid down for general guidance that no licences should be issued to shops which are in close proximity to places of worship, schools or hospitals.

During the plague epidemic last year the city of Poona had the opportunity to experience the benefit of having all the civil courts in one place. It was through the goodness of our sympathetic district judge, Mr. Percival, that all the courts in the Shanwar Wada were permitted to be shifted and accommodated in the district court premises. The advantages derived by the public and the pleaders were generally held to be satisfactory; and a general desire now prevails on the part of the public who hope that Government will in the near future provide for the location of courts in one place.

As the proverb goes "Out of evil cometh good" and this great war although it has played havoc, yet we have learned from it one thing, that India must rise to the occasion and look after the development of its own industries, which it is quite possible to do with the help of Government. We are now convinced that there are many industries, which, if developed, would make us independent of European markets, and this achievement is only possible by educating the masses. By educating the people it is not only the people of the country that are benefited, but also the Government. Education will cultivate the minds of the rising generation and will make them useful members of society, respectable and loyal citizens, thus helping in the smooth administration of Government. Besides much of the evil which arises through ignorance will disappear and both the rulers and the ruled will better understand each other. And this laudable ambition of ours could only be realized, your Excellency, by making education compulsory.

The income tax assessment is not viewed with satisfaction by the majority of people and Government will be pleased to try and satisfy them by adopting such measures as will not give them any cause to complain. I know it is easy to preach, but still, I hope, that this grievance which is a real one will meet with some solution. It looks so very anomalous that the officer who assesses the tax has the sole voice at first in deciding the appeals from his own decision; and he is also the judge of the correctness of the tax which he himself has levied. Though I mean to make no imputations against any individual officer, still it is very unlikely and unnatural, while human nature is what it is, that he would decide the appeals against his own former assessment.

With respect to the abolition of the posts of shirastedars of the district judges in this Presidency, I venture to say, that these posts were a creation of very long standing, dating as far back as 1873, and therefore the holders of these posts deserve kind consideration at the hands of Government. So far, there has been no complaint about the efficiency of their work and they have proved themselves competent in the discharge of the important duties attached to their offices. This result is due to the experience gained by dint of hard work, for all these years, starting as they do in the lower grade of service, in the department. From my experience in Poona I can very safely say that the shirastedars of the Poona district judge's court have all along maintained the dignity of the post and have been considered by their superiors as efficient servants. Even the public are satisfied with their work. If this is the case, a departure from the old system involving their abolition is really a sad blow to those in the department. These new personal assistants, though well read and educated men, will still be lacking in all technical knowledge regarding the different subjects pertaining to the districts to which they may be posted. Much has been made of the supervision of the property of minors. But with due deference I may say that even under this intended change, the chances of similar wrongs being done away with are remote.

BUDGET.

[24TH JULY 1917.] [Sardar Shriniwas Coopooswamy Mudliar; the President; Mr. Ghulam Muhammad Bhurgri; Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani.]

The state of revenue collection in villages was most unsatisfactory, but it has since been improved beyond expectation in the Central Division by the strict enforcement of rules since the regime of the Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS as Commissioner of the Central Division. He has placed the inamdars under his obligation for the consideration shown to them. I request permission, my lord, to refer to the memorial of the inamdars of the Bijapur district, submitted to your Excellency in April last, in which these facts are very clearly discussed. I hope your Excellency will be pleased to consider the grievances and pass such orders as will help in promoting the welfare and preserving the dignity of this class of ancient aristocracy.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. As far as I can understand the honourable member, his remarks for the last five minutes have nothing to do with the budget at all. I think he is dealing with the complaints of the inamdars.

The Honourable Sardar MUDLIAR:—I am only referring to the position of the inamdars.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I am afraid I cannot allow him to go on, as I have said, it has nothing to do with the budget.

The Honourable Mr. GHULAM MUHAMMAD walad Khan Bahadur WALI MUHAMMAD BHURGRI:—Your Excellency, I had no intention of speaking to-day but I find one important matter in the budget on which I feel I must speak. My lord, it has been often said in this Council that Sind has been treated by the Bombay Government as its step-daughter in the matter of finance, and I find from the figures in the budget that it is really so. Your Excellency has been to Sind and you must have marked that what we want urgently is the development of roads in the rural parts of the country.

The first demand which we must make on the provincial expenditure is therefore for roads. I find, sir, that the Government of Bombay is spending something like 21 lakhs every year on provincial roads in the Presidency proper, while in Sind I find that only a paltry sum of Rs. 803 have been spent this year. And what is more, we have got only one provincial road while in the Northern Division there are 66 provincial roads, in the Central Division there are 77, and in the Southern Division there are 83 provincial roads.

Again, sir, if you look at the mileage, we have got only 5 miles supported by provincial funds in Sind, while there are 768 miles in the Northern Division, 1,942 in the Central Division and 2,488 in the Southern Division.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Will the honourable member tell me what he is reading from.

The Honourable Mr. BHURGRI:—I am reading from the question paper, Appendix A.

Your Excellency, from these figures it will appear that we have been really treated very badly all these years. I must, therefore, appeal to my honourable friend, the Finance Member, to give us some money for provincial roads in future and treat us like other divisions of the Presidency.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—My lord, I wish to make a few remarks while congratulating the Honourable the Finance Member on the satisfactory budget he has placed before us. Well, in such a satisfactory budget we should have expected some marked reforms introduced in some of the important branches of public administration, but on that point, I confess, we are disappointed. The remarks which have fallen from the speakers, who have preceded me, will show that several heads of income and expenditure require to be better attended to than they have been. My lord, to begin with land revenue, the budget shows that the amount shown for arrears and suspensions for this year is less than in previous years. Unfortunately for us, the season does not appear to be as propitious as it was expected when the budget was drawn up. In several districts the rain has held up and probably the situation is not as satisfactory as we should have desired. It will, therefore, be necessary, I believe, to increase the amount of suspensions and also of remissions. This point, I submit, will have to be taken into consideration. In my district, West Khandesh, and in Sholapur, I find that cattle are suffering. There will probably be a great deal of distress which will require to be relieved.

Then we come to the second item in statement A of the budget. It refers to stamps. That is an item which shows large revenue and disproportionately small expenditure in collection. But I do not think this is satisfactory. The total revenue under this head is Rs. 96,50,000 and expenditure for collection is Rs. 2,48,000. This economy in expenditure is, I think, detrimental to public interests. I may point out that while we have in the Presidency so many as 25,654 inhabited villages, the number of stamp-vendors in the Presidency proper is only 852 and in Sind 348 I place it before the honourable members whether this is adequate provision to supply stamps to so many villages spread over an area of 123,070 square miles. In fact, what happens is that villagers have to go often away from their village to find the stamp-vendor and if he happen not to be at home or have not got a stamp of the value they want they have to go in search of one at another village. This causes unnecessary trouble and expenditure out of proportion to what they have to pay towards stamps. It is absolutely necessary in the interests of these poor agriculturists, who have more necessity to purchase these stamps, that there should be a much better provision for their sale. Stamp-vendors now have a very poor scale of fees allowed to them, and it does not allow good men to take up this work, nor allow of sufficient hands being engaged for the same.

In connection with the item of stamps that of law and justice should also be considered. My honourable friend, Rao Bahadur SATHE, has already spoken so fully on the subject of the civil courts' delays that I need not further dilate on it. But that is a subject which we have to press on Government's attention. My contention is not only that there are delays but people have to wait too long to have their cases heard by the civil courts. I have urged before this Council a number of times in our budget discussions that this inconvenience operates very hard on the poor litigants. We have not got courts for each taluka, but in many cases two and in some even three or four talukas are under one court. People have to go long distances outside their taluka and in some cases to walk 60 miles even without any good roads. I think this reform should be taken up early both in the interests of the courts themselves as also of the public. So this item will, I hope, receive more attention.

I next come to income-tax, and as regards this item I join in supporting the Honourable Mr. PURUSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS in his complaints about over-assessments more particulary in the mofussil districts. During the last few years there has been depression of trade owing to the war, and during this year, in particular, there has been further dislocation on account of the suspension of railway goods traffic to Bombay and to the demands on the people for the war loan. Therefore, I submit, that this tax should have been reduced rather than increased, but I find that while the actual total receipts under this item for 1915-16 stood at Rs. 73,48,676 and were estimated in the budget for 1916-17 at Rs. 1,05,45,000, this year their estimate has gone up to Rs. 2,01,97,000.

Next as regards forests I have to urge that the expenditure is disproportionate to the income. I submit that this is due to want of sufficient attention being paid to the development of forests. I submit that we want better hands to look after these forests and if there were forest schools in our own Presidency, better results would be achieved.

Then as regards police, as my honourable friend Mr. KAMAT has submitted we have repeatedly drawn Government's attention to the increasing expenditure under this head and what I have particularly to urge this time is that in addition to the expenditure on the unnecessarily increased staff of the department, there is further ever-growing expenditure for additional provision for their quarters which costs a great deal. Now if we only look at the details under the provision for civil buildings, what do we find? Well, the total provision for new buildings is Rs. 24,73,300. Out of this no less than Rs. 9,20,820 go for police lines and Rs. 5,58,000 for administrative buildings and the provision for educational buildings is only Rs. 1,28,000, the balance going to other departments. This increasing expenditure could be checked if for the present at least the erection of new police quarters were deferred until we have had sufficient experience of the re-organization scheme to know whether all this increase in the department will have to be maintained or will require retrenchment.

Then as regards the scientific department, I desire to say that there is no adequate provision for promotion of new industries or development of existing ones. In fact, in the present favourable war times other countries have taken advantage in this respect, but we are standing with folded hands and doing nothing. I have pressed this matter on the attention of Government every year at budget discussion and by interpellations, but I regret that very little has been done in this direction. We are told the Industrial Commission is going to come to our Presidency shortly. But our experience of commissions has been far too disappointing. However satisfactory the report of this commission may be, it will take a long time to be of any practical effect. What we want is to take immediate advantage of the opportunities created by the war. I am not sure the report will be satisfactory from our standpoint. However, I say that even if the report is satisfactory there won't be any immediate advantage. We suffer in various ways. We have to pay double, treble and even more for the imported articles we want and very little is being done to increase their local supply, even as regards those articles that can be manufactured here.

Next as regards education, the state of affairs is also not satisfactory. My lord, while the tendency has been to increase the emoluments of higher services and to make them top-heavy, the lower services have been neglected. Well, as regards this department, the evil is far too serious to be allowed to continue any longer. More than half the number of headmasters in vernacular schools draw an average pay of only Rs. 11-4-3 and more than two-thirds of the assistant masters only Rs. 9-6-4 a month. Now as the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE has pointed out, these men do not get the wages which ordinary illiterate labourers get, and I submit this pay is not sufficient for headmasters and teachers. It is for this Council to seriously consider whether with this scale of pay we shall be able to make any headway in primary education. As a matter of fact the state of education is far from satisfactory. Out of a total number of 6,70,141 pupils in primary schools in 1915-16, only 1,08,494 were in the upper primary stage, 3,72,000 could only read printed books, so many as 1,89,423 could not even read printed books, and only 2,352 could pass the 7th standard examination. This is a state of things which is hardly satisfactory, and I think it is for us to make the necessary improvements. Larger grants are necessary for the local boards and municipalities, and for the smaller municipalities in particular. It will be seen that out of the total number of pupils in primary schools the local board schools provide for about 3,84,851 pupils in boys' and for 25,135 in girls' schools and the municipal schools for 1,13,677 in boys' and 32,269 in girls' schools, and whereas the local board schools get a grant of Rs. 26,87,000, the municipal schools get only Rs. 4,91,166 as provincial grants for their expenditure, and the smaller municipalities especially are very hard hit and cannot make any progress.

At the last Council meeting we were assured that a provision of Rs. 6,00,000 would be made for school buildings, and I hope that the programme is ready and will be carried out in the current year, though I could not make out anything from the details given in this budget to give us immediate hope on this particular point.

Then as regards high schools and middle schools, their condition is still less satisfactory. I will not take up any more time of the Council in quoting the figures. But it will be seen that the grant-in-aid given to municipalities are not in proportion to the number of students whom they train in secondary schools. In many cases the grants-in-aid given to other institutions are out of proportion to the number of students for whose education they make provision. Therefore a more equitable and more liberal grant to municipalities and local boards for both these classes of schools is, I think, absolutely needed.

Lastly we come to the civil works heading of the budget. In this we find that in the matter of communications the provision is not quite adequate. My own district, as the Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL and the Honourable Mr. CURTIS are aware, is least developed so far as communication is concerned, but out of the sums provided for this purpose in the budget which amount to Rs. 7,50,000, my district, West Khandesh, gets only Rs. 9,500 for one road and Rs. 5,500 for an inspection bungalow. This is too small. The whole of Khandesh from east to west is divided by the river Tapti and along the whole line of the river there is not a single bridge across. I have been pressing for a bridge on this river on the Agra road between Nardana and Shirpur. I see that some provision is made for a causeway, but it is not sufficient. A pakka bridge over the Tapti on the Agra road is necessary. Some provision for that was needed.

As regards East Khandesh, it gets in all Rs. 60,000, but the burden of the roads thrown on the local boards in that district has made their position worse. They have gone into debt and are not able to pay all that. Even the amounts due for lands taken up for roads remain unpaid. The needs and claims of all the different districts require to be better attended to than can be done at present by the Council. The best way to do that would be to decentralize and have these subjects discussed, especially the expenditure for the several districts, by a responsible body in each district itself. Unless this is done, it is not possible to meet the needs of the districts adequately. If the district darbars were developed into district councils, it would be much better. We should then be able to discuss these matters with the district authorities. In any case if statements of district income and expenditure were laid before us, we should be in a position to compare notes and to see whether the needs and claims of the several districts have been adequately met. That will make an improvement on the existing state of things and afford great assistance in our deliberations here on the budget allotments.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH:—May it please your Excellency, I propose to make some observations on some few points in connection with the budget.

My honourable friend Mr. PARANJPYE has referred the Council to the great loss that the public purse suffers by the compulsory retirement of officers at the age of 55 and I completely endorse the arguments that he has urged before the Council. So with reference to the argument on the other side, namely, that the expectations of the junior members of the service would be disappointed, I submit that there is nothing whatever in it inasmuch as, if the rules remain as before, the juniors would not suffer at all, as they would only have, in order to go to the top of the service, serve for some more years, and therefore I do not think that so far as the junior officers are concerned they would suffer in any way. My honourable friend Mr. PARANJPYE has referred merely to the economic aspect of the question. The matter is also to be considered from the point of view of efficiency. Neither my honourable friend Mr. PARANJPYE nor I wish that members of the service who have become either physically or mentally unfit for doing their work with efficiency should be retained in service. In reference to such people the rule as it exists provides for their elimination. But in the case of other people the result is that when the man has become most capable and most efficient by experience, increased knowledge and mastery of details, it is at that time that Government desires that his services should be dispensed with simply because he is 55. Thus the man is retired at a time when his services become most valuable to Government. In that way, I submit, the efficiency of service suffers considerably by the compulsory retirement of those people who attain the age of 55 unless there is a special recommendation for retaining them in service. I therefore submit that in the case of people who have not become physically or mentally unfit for the discharge of their duties efficiently, there should not be any compulsory retirement.

The second point to which I would refer is with reference to the opening of an agricultural school at Godhra for which Rs. 35,000 have been assigned. I do not at all object to that school being opened; bearing in mind the fact that a considerable part of the Panch Mahals population consists of wild and backward tribes, I fully sympathise with the efforts of Government to reclaim them from their habits of indolence, improvidence and irregular and unsustained work by imparting to them education in practical agriculture. A great deal of the aboriginal population of that district suffers from ignorance and it will be a great gain to the country if these aboriginal people could be induced to lead industrious and steady lives. In that way I should think that the money budgetted for the agricultural school at Godhra would be properly utilized. But then, as regards the rest of the money, I should think it would be most desirable that it should be also applied for the benefit of agriculturists; and the way in which I suggest that it should be applied is this: where the agriculturists are naturally skilled, industrious and intelligent, and have resources which they can apply to their cultivation, it would be a great advantage if Government are able to place within their reach scientific education and information. I would, therefore, propose that in the two districts to which I refer, namely the districts of Kaira and Broach, where the agriculturists are skilled cultivators, have got resources, are intelligent and are likely to be benefited if scientific education and information were placed within their reach, this money should be utilized towards objects by which their knowledge of the scientific method of agriculture would be increased and facilitate their acquisition of useful information on agricultural topics.

The next point to which I would refer is this: I have been informed that in certain talukas of the Kaira district, the revenue officers instead of allowing the landowners to pay their assessment for the last year by instalments as usual, they require them to pay it at one time at the time when a considerable part of their crops could not have been fit for disposal. In reference to such orders it is very usual for officers, who are either unsympathetic or who do not care for the convenience of the agriculturists and want to be relieved of trouble so far as their own responsibilities are concerned, to pass such orders even during the period of bad years. The reason for making the Government assessment payable by instalments is that the agriculturists should not have to go to the money-lenders for payment of their assessment. For that reason the period for payment of the assessment in each district is so arranged that it may become payable at the time that the agriculturist gets his money in return for his products. I submit therefore that to press agriculturists to make them pay their full assessment at one time or to make an order to that effect is to defeat the object for which the instalment system has been introduced. I therefore think that it is necessary in order that harsh orders of this kind should not be repeated by the revenue officers that the wishes of Government in this matter are again put clearly before the officers who have to conduct the revenue administration of Government in the districts.

The next point to which I wish to draw the attention of the Council is in reference to the Kalambandi villages of the Matar taluka. In reference to these villages there have been differences of long standing between Government and the ryots, but it is not at all necessary to enter into the question as to which side is in the wrong.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. I really do not think this has got anything to do with the Budget.

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH:—If your Excellency permits me I shall show that these remarks of mine have reference to the question of revenue. It is in this way. What I wish Government to do is to make an inquiry into the condition of the people and see whether the revenue that is now levied from the people is the proper revenue that they ought to pay. Such an inquiry is necessary for determining whether the ryots are deserving the basis on which the revenue settlement was made. It is a matter in reference to which, I submit, it is necessary that there should be an inquiry, and without such inquiry it would be really difficult to ascertain the real condition of things.

There is one more point on which I should wish that there should be some explanation. I may be wrong in the interpretation which I put upon the matter and it may possibly be capable of another interpretation. At page 45 of the detailed statement it would appear that against Talukdari Settlement Officer at Ahmedabad in this year's budget there is an item of Rs. 47,000 shown, and in the accounts of 1915-16 the amount against this sub-head was Rs. 15,000. In the budget of the last year it was Rs. 29,000 and in the revised financial statement it is Rs. 22,000. How this increase of Rs. 25,000 has occurred it is difficult to understand.

The Honorable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—May I point out that there is a reduction of Rs. 2,000 in the budget as compared with last year?

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH:—What I wish to point out is that Rs. 22,000 were in the figures for last year and Rs. 47,000 are for this year.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—No. The present figure is Rs. 27,000, which is included in a total of Rs. 47,000. But I wish to point out that for the particular item under consideration, Rs. 29,000 was the budget for the last year. This year it is Rs. 27,000. There is another item of Rs. 20,000, but this is for the survey of talukdari villages. It is true the total comes up to Rs. 47,000, but in one case it is two items and in the other it is only one.

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH:—I thought it may have been Rs. 47,000 because in the revised estimate it was stated that the increase in connection with the talukdari estates was owing to the cost of the survey.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—Yes, that is so.

The Honourable Mr. PAREKH:—I thought that it was owing to that that the figure had risen. But if it is Rs. 27,000 only, I have no further observation to make on that point.

The Honourable Mr. F. G. PRATT:—Your Excellency, the Honourable Mr. PAREKH has told us of some abuse that he understands has occurred in the Kaira district by disobedience of the standing orders under which the assessment or land revenue should be collected by instalments and not in a lump sum. The people of the Kaira district are not slow in voicing their complaints or grievances as I know from the steady stream of revenue appeals from that district, but this is the first time I have ever heard of any abuse of this kind. I think the honourable member would have done better if he had asked a question about this matter in which case he would have been supplied with definite information about it, or if he had represented the facts as they were brought to his notice to the collector of the district or to the commissioner of the division.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I am not going to detain the Council long. I had no intention to say anything on the budget as I consider that any discussion at this stage is futile; but the remarks of my honourable friends, Messrs. DESAI and PARANJPYE, tempt me to say something. My honourable friend, Mr. DESAI, says that the discussion on the budget is useful inasmuch as it will be considered by the finance committee, and my honourable friend, Mr. PARANJPYE, says that this Council is responsible for the budget. Speaking for myself, your Excellency, I say that neither statement is correct. As for the statement made by my honourable friend, Mr. DESAI, that the various matters discussed at the budget meeting of this Council would be taken into consideration by the finance committee, I may say at once that I have been serving on the finance committee as an elected member for the last two years and I have noticed that business conducted there is entirely one-sided. The chairman of the finance committee determines the subjects open for discussion according to what he considers to be the interpretation of the finance rules. No information is supplied to us and we do not know what recommendations come from the district officers or the various heads of the departments. Some items of expenditure are selected probably on those recommendations and we are called upon to say whether we agree to the selection so made.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I do not think this has anything to do with the budget. I think it refers to a difference of opinion between my honourable friend and my honourable colleague.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Coming to the budget, speaking for myself, I say that it is futile to attempt any discussion of it at this stage, but when I have got up to speak, I should like to make a few observations. My honourable friend, Mr. KAMAT, has been talking year after year about the growing expenditure in prosecuting the police reorganization scheme and your Excellency is well aware that not only the Honourable Mr. KAMAT but almost all the non-official members have been asking Government whether the expenditure so far incurred has really secured any real efficiency of the police force. But why talk of the non-official members? Able officers of Government as my honourable friend, Mr. LAWRENCE, on one side and my honourable friend, Mr. PRATT, on the other have also stated to Government in their divisional police reports that the time has come when Government should stop and make some enquiry. I was surprised to find, your Excellency, when I put a question in this Council this morning as to whether Government had made an enquiry into the working of the police department since its reorganization, that the answer was "No". If it were merely the view held by us, non-official members of this Council, I could quite understand your Excellency's Government's attitude in this matter. These views, we know, are treated with scant consideration. But when great officers of Government like the Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE and the Honourable Mr. PRATT agree with us in the view we take of the situation, I submit that the matter must receive due consideration. I reserve further remarks on this question, because I have got a resolution on the subject.

Now your Excellency, with regard to the question of the hill exodus. We know that year after year several thousands of rupees are being spent by Government from provincial revenues on these tours and I do submit, your Excellency, that the time has come when your Excellency's Government should seriously consider whether one trip to Mahableshwar, say in the month of April or May, would not suffice for the upkeep of the energy and the dignity of the members of Government. After all, I believe, my lord, that these trips do not keep the members of Government longer than the ordinary individuals who do not afford or care to go to the hills. They are, my lord, human beings as we are, and I certainly think that your Excellency's Government should seriously consider this question. I gave notice of a resolution on this matter with a view that the matter may be thoroughly discussed in this Council. That resolution was unfortunately not allowed by your Excellency and I have, therefore, taken this opportunity to refer to the subject.

Then another matter which I should like to invite the Council's attention to is the absence of any provision for the improvement of the indigenous systems of medicine such as ayurvedic and unani systems. Your Excellency, this subject has become more acute since the passing of the Medical Registration Act. I do not want to go into that controversy at present, but the manner in which that act is being worked at present is most unsatisfactory. However, in view of the changed attitude of the Government of India and other local Governments on this question I think it is high time that some attempt should be made by this Government to improve these systems. I may notice in passing that the Madras Government has already moved in the matter and they have appointed a special officer on the recommendation of the Legislative Council. So far as this Council is concerned, I gave notice of a resolution on the subject and that, too, unfortunately was disallowed.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. CARMICHAEL.—Your Excellency.—We have had rather a long debate on a good many questions to which I have to reply.

I will take first the question of the police to which several honourable members have referred. The Hon'ble Mr. KAMAT has referred to it for the second or third time at the budget meetings of this Council.

The Hon'ble Mr. PATEL has referred to the answer given to his question No. 18. A negative reply was given to his question whether an enquiry had been made. As a matter of fact, the enquiry is proceeding, but is not complete, and as I said on the occasion of the budget meeting last year, the matter has been the subject of discussion between the Commissioners of Divisions and the Inspector-General of Police. The district magistrates have also been consulted and the question is now being dealt with by my honourable colleague in charge of the police department. With regard to the actual increase which has occurred, I wish to make it clear that the entertainment of additional men or officers has ceased for some time. In the budget estimate the allotment which has been provided is intended to cover certain additional items of expenditure under clothing, hutting allowances, supplies and service and local allowances. Some of the honourable members have referred to the fact that the rank and file of the police are not sufficiently well paid. This has been found to be the case particularly in some of the larger centres where the wages of the ordinary labourer are high. To meet these cases local allowances have been given, but the number of men has not been increased. Similarly in many places the accommodation provided for the men is very inadequate, and far short of the actual requirements. In other cases the rooms are unhealthy and of a poor type. Both the Commissioner in Sind and the Inspector-General of Police for the Presidency proper have pressed on Government very strongly indeed the need for undertaking an adequate building programme to provide for the accommodation of the rank and file of the force. The Hon'ble Mr. UPASANI took some objection to this but I think from what has fallen from other honourable members with regard to the remuneration of the rank and file, this Council will agree that the expenditure is very necessary. Where buildings could not be completed in time and where we had not money to undertake their construction, it was necessary to increase the hutting allowances which are given. That is another reason for the higher expenditure. Then again when one considers the fact that one of the reasons why recruitment was so bad was that the men were not properly paid, it follows that if you give these extra hutting allowances and local allowances, recruitment should improve. In preparing the budget allowance has been made for the increase in the number of men expected to result from the better conditions which we are giving. One of the reasons why the actual expenditure under police has been so low as compared with the budget—some honourable members say it is not low—is that our estimates are framed on the assumption that the force will be maintained up to its sanctioned strength. When the pay is found to be inadequate and the men do not come forward in sufficient numbers to complete the strength, then it happens that the actuals work out very much less than anticipated when the budget was framed. Already very considerable reduction has been made in certain directions, further progress in completing the reorganization of the police according to the recommendations of the Police Commission has been suspended and the whole question is now being examined. One of the most pressing points is the consideration whether the pay is adequate or not and it must be remembered that a very small increase in the pay per men means a very large increase in the total requirements.

The Hon'ble Mr. LALUBHAI and the Hon'ble Mr. MUNMOHUNDASS RAMJI have referred to the position of the college of commerce in Bombay. This is somewhat surprising to me as both these gentlemen, the Hon'ble Mr. LALUBHAI as the Chairman of the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau and the Hon'ble Mr. MUNMOHUNDASS RAMJI as the representative of the Bombay Piece-goods Merchants' Association, are on the advisory board of the college, and though in this Council they press very strongly the claims of the college of commerce, I understand that the associations which they represent propose to withdraw their contributions. These were promised as annual contributions and on this understanding the scheme was sanctioned. I presume that they entirely disagree.....

The Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI SAMALDAS MEHTA:—May I rise to a point of order, your Excellency? I think that the Honourable Mr. MUNMOHUNDASS RAMJI said that the contributions were only for 3 years.

The Honourable Mr. CARMICHAEL:—In that case I would appeal to both the honourable members to try to move the associations which they represent. To continue the contribution, if not for anything else, then as a token that both the associations are in sympathy with the work which is being carried on in the college. The Hon'ble Mr. LALUBHAI asked some information with regard to the financing of the college. The position is this: the budget allotment this year is for Rs. 87,348. Out of this sum Rs. 7,444 is the nett recurring cost on account of the hostel and the department have decided that this amount should be debited against the income from the Lord Sydenham Memorial Fund, so that really speaking the balance, roughly, Rs. 80,000 is for the college itself. Against this there is an income of Rs. 8,580 from the endowment of Sir Jugmohundass Varjivandass and Rs. 3,500 from the endowment of Sir Chunibhai Madhavlal, and Rs. 3,200 from the endowment promised by the Wadia trustees. This last item will ultimately amount to Rs. 4,800 when the trustees have paid in the full amount. They have given so far Rs. 80,000, and of this Rs. 20,000 was received the other day and has not yet been invested. Thus the actual amount we expect to get this year in interest is Rs. 15,280. There are contributions from the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, the Millowners' Association, the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, the Bombay Native Piece-goods Merchants' Association and the Millowners' Association of Ahmedabad. I think we can count on all of these except the Ahmedabad Millowners' Association, giving a total of Rs. 4,500 which is included in the item of Rs. 8,000, "Contributions" under XIX—Education in the budget estimates. Fee receipts amount to Rs. 37,000 and this gives us a total of Rs. 57,000, leaving a nett cost to Government of Rs. 23,000. I think the Hon'ble Mr. PARANJPYE said that Rs. 15,000 out of this amount was given by the Government of India for this particular object. I do not think you can say that it was given for the particular college. It was given out of the imperial grant for technical education. However that may be, I do not think the point affects the question of what Government pays, because it is money which comes from the general taxpayer's pocket, whether it came from the Government of India or from provincial revenues.

The Honourable Mr. MUNMOHUNDASS RAMJI referred to the location of the college. A committee has been appointed and the question of finding a new site is being investigated. But it is a difficult matter if the site for the College must be near the business part of the city.

With regard to the permanent lecturers at the college, I think I am right in saying that so far Government have carried out what the original scheme comprised. I was not aware that there was any great desire for further extension because in the finance committee the items over which there was the fiercest fight were the proposed increases for the college of commerce.

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS, the Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI and the Honourable Mr. UPASANI referred to the development of our forest estates. This, it is true, is a very important matter; and I think that the Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS'S idea of having two separate branches and possibly three, one for conservancy and sylviculture, the commercial side, and the engineering side, is a very useful suggestion indeed. At the present moment it is of course very difficult to get any new plant and new machinery out from home and it is also very difficult to get any additional staff. We asked the Government of India to lend us the services of one of our officers who is now serving at Dehra Dun, but they could not spare him. We wanted him as a mechanical engineer. We have employed one of the public works department officers on civil engineering work in the forest department. The Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI suggested that the Government of India might spare Mr. Pearson to come down here. I should be only too glad to have him, but I think there is not much chance of obtaining him. I should like to say what has actually been done. I believe the Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI has already undertaken one small forest industry with the help of a syndicate. I wish him good fortune in connection with it. Under the direction of the Munitions Board, work is going on in connection with the investigation of tanning materials obtainable from the forests and we are sending up one of our Conservators to assist in the investigation and to obtain information. We have also one of our forest officers working under the Munitions Board exploiting the resources of the forests in Bombay and Sind for supplies of timber and fuel. His work is primarily in connection with the supplies needed for the war, but I have no doubt he will obtain a vast amount of useful information and open up new lines of work. Apart from improvement in the means of transporting timber, one of the greatest needs is to obtain a market for the timbers which are less valueable than teak. In that connection Mr. Pearson is conducting experiments in Kanara. It takes some years before the right method of treating each kind of wood can be discovered. His experiments are now nearing completion. Another point is that as the Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS suggested, the timber has to be standardised and put in a form which will give confidence to the possible purchaser. We need more saw mills and this year we did get some additional plant, but it is very difficult to obtain any more at this time. We obtained what we could in Bombay. The Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI referred to the reafforestation of blank spaces. I can assure him that very good progress is being made in this particular branch of forest work both in Kanara and in other places. I believe some very good examples are to be seen near Poona.

With regard to the utilisation of the profits out of the wheat scheme, various proposals have been made, and I have no doubt that the Honourable Mr. KEATINGE will consider them before he submits any proposals to Government. The Honourable Mr. DESAI and the Honourable Rao Bahadur NAIK pleaded for a steam plough for Bijapur and also a cattle breeding farm. I do not know whether it would be quite fair to put two farms in that part of the country. I may remark that the Government of India have tied us down strictly in regard to utilising this money and have stipulated that it must be applied to some distinct and new scheme of agricultural improvement. We are not to utilise it in the expansion of our present work, such as the extension of co-operative work as suggested by the Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI. Several honourable members have referred to the low pay of the police, the number of clerks still on Rs. 15 and the low pay of the menial staff at Karachi and cognate questions. One honourable member was very sorry indeed—I think it was the Honourable Rao Bahadur NAIK—for the condition of the mamlatdars. No doubt, mamlatdars have a good deal of work to do but it is not correct to say that their grade of pay was not improved. It was improved about the year 1905 and they have benefited this year by the war. We have been taking a considerable number of our deputy collectors for work in connection with the war—recruiting work—and we have also had to take on more deputy collectors to take the place of assistant collectors who have gone on military duty. This has given quick promotion in the mamlatdar class and in the grades below and I do not think there is any serious grievance to be remedied. With regard to what the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI told us about what has been done in Karachi under the proposals of the municipality of Karachi, I can only say that the Commissioner in Sind has reported the matter and it is under the consideration of Government now. I should be very glad to provide the extra amount needed to bring the lowest grade of clerks in Government service up from Rs. 15 to Rs. 20. The matter will be looked into. As the Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI informed us, it does not involve a very large sum, but we should also remember the other provisions we have to make, more particularly for improving the pay of the school masters.

With regard to the point raised by the Honourable Mr. PARANJPYE I think, after what fell from the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI, there is really very little more for me to say; his is a convincing answer and it represents the view of Government. I may say, first of all, that the policy is not a new one. The policy is old and a sound one which has been applied to all civil servants, in some services more strictly than others. What is new is in the application of the policy in certain services. In the public works services cases of extension are uncommon. In the Indian Civil Service they are unknown. On one memorable occasion in this Council Hall I remember a non-official member told us how good the rule was under which a member of the Executive Council has to retire after 5 years' service and he went on to say that there were as good fish in the sea as ever came out of it. That is the principle on which Government work and it is only in the case of men who are really efficient and who have some specially valuable aptitude or qualifications, men whom we cannot replace easily, that it is considered advisable to grant extensions. It is quite true that it is laid down in the civil service regulations that care should be taken not to add unnecessarily to the non-effective charges. When a retirement occurs, of course, it does add to the non-effective charges, but the question is whether it does so unnecessarily. The view of Government, as the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI pointed out, coincides with the view of men in business, commercial men, that if you keep the younger staff too long in subordinate positions, they become discouraged and the service becomes demoralized. This is particularly the case when the service required of them involves a willingness to undertake responsibility and a large measure of initiative. If you keep them too long on low pay their energies become deadened. I think on this point we should accept the opinion of business men like the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI, in spite of the view put forward by members who have some sympathy with the old men.

The Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI referred to the provision made for the campaign against tuberculosis. The only thing that can be said on this point is that the first step to be taken is to go to the root of the matter and try to get rid of insanitary buildings and overcrowding in our large cities. Perhaps your Excellency will permit me to say, that your Excellency has taken a deep interest in this question ever since the day you landed in India and recently you were able to bring the question as between the Millowners' Association and the Improvement Trust to a point at which the actual ways and means are to be discussed and it is hoped that out of the discussion a practical wide-reaching scheme will result. I have not seen Col. Evans' report, to which the Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI refers, but I am sure the honourable member will find Government quite sympathetic and willing to consider a scheme if one is proposed. At present the amount of grant given to the Anti-Tuberculosis League is, I think, about Rs. 10,000.

The Honourable Mr. LALUBHAI referred to the provision last year in the budget for experiment in connection with the production of magnesium chloride. The experiment has been completed and the work was taken up at Kharaghoda by a gentleman of Ahmedabad and Government understand that the amount that can be produced in that particular factory would suffice for all the needs of the mills in India. The raw-material required is a waste product in the manufacture of salt. The Government of India, in the interests of imperial revenue, have laid restrictions with regard to the locality in which the manufacture of this salt is permitted and it seems to me that the same restrictions will follow as regards the locality in which the manufacture of magnesium chloride is permitted.

The Honourable Mr. BHURGRI referred to the question of roads in Sind. I think he has had opportunities, having been a member of the finance committee for a good many years, of representing the case for Sind, but this is the first time I have heard him making a suggestion that Sind had not had enough money for road construction and that it is advisable to make an allotment for the purpose. I do not myself have any local knowledge of Sind. The Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE mentioned the possibility of reconstructing one of the old military roads, but I have not heard anybody else propose that a very large sum should be spent on roads in Sind. In any case, it seems to me that as people in Sind do not appear to have felt the want before it cannot be at present a very pressing one.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE objects to the improvement of the road running from Dhond to Manmad. That of course is outside the district local board of which the Honourable Dewan Bahadur is president. I think if we had Mr. Chitale as a member of this Council, perhaps we should have heard an opposite opinion. There is no doubt that there is great need for the improvement. Perhaps the Honourable Dewan Bahadur is to construct another railway in that neighbourhood. I think it is one of his projects. This particular road passes through the canal area and it is very necessary that the various nalas which are filled with waste or seepage water from the canals should be put in proper order by means of causeways. I would also bring to the notice of this Council the fact that in the Honourable Dewan Bahadur's own district we have provided a considerable sum for a bridge on the road up the Ghod river from Poona to Junnar. I think that it is in contemplation that a railway should be constructed along that very road and I believe the Honourable Dewan Bahadur himself is very much in favour of that railway.

With regard to the Kennedy sea face wall, all I need say is that somebody had to carry out this very urgent work, because if it had not been undertaken the old wall, which is not very strong, would have given way, and a large slice of Bombay would have disappeared. If the municipality said that it was not their duty, somebody had to do it and Government have undertaken it. In the matter of the road which it is proposed should run along the inside of the wall, Government hope to obtain the co-operation of the municipality.

The Honourable SHEIKH GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH suggested that a certain portion of Sind land revenue should be set aside for primary education in Sind. As a matter of fact the allotment in the budget very nearly does follow a fixed proportion of the revenue in Sind. I work it out in this way. The local boards give one-third of the local fund cess for education and they get two-thirds of their educational expenditure from Government. It therefore follows that the Government allotment is at present in proportion to the local fund and the land revenue.

The Honourable Mr. NAIK, referring to the grant for dispensaries, inadvertently gave the sum as Rs. 15,000. It is really Rs. 30,000 and this is new expenditure in addition to the old expenditure which appears as an ordinary item. We are spending a good deal more than Rs. 30,000. Out of this new expenditure of Rs. 30,000 a considerable part will be recurring expenditure which will be added to the old total.

The Honourable Mr. KAMAT asked whether we could draw on our balance. The position is this. The Government of India sanction the budget which we are now discussing and they allow us fairly freely to make reappropriation between one head and another, but we must keep within the limits of the total amount provided for expenditure. If we are likely to exceed that total, than we have to go up to them for sanction to the addition of the grant under the particular head on which the excess is likely to occur. As a matter of fact there is a certain element of caution in our estimates and unless we have very bad luck in connection with the monsoon, I do not anticipate that there will be any necessity to go up to the Government of India. They have sanctioned this budget so recently as the middle of March and it would be inappropriate to approach them just now before we know whether we shall actually require an addition or not.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE referred to the buildings for Government officers which it is proposed to put up in Bombay and Poona. I am very glad to have an opportunity of discussing this question. I think his idea of the interest charges is not quite correct. The usual rate charged is 5 per cent. He says that if the principle is extended we should have to provide bungalows for every officer of Government. It all depends on the particular necessity of the case. In some cases it is necessary to provide buildings and the matter has become very urgent. The provision of accommodation for the police is an obligation on us, because the terms on which the men are engaged are that they should get free quarters, if not they must be given an allowance in lieu thereof.

With regard to the construction of police buildings, the Honourable Mr. CURTIS, who is in charge of the department, reminds me that it really pays us to construct the buildings. By providing police buildings, we save in hutting allowances an amount representing interest of about 4 per cent. on the monies spent.

Then in Bombay we have the question of peons and menials which will have to be taken up. There also it has become exceedingly difficult for Government officers who have to go to Bombay to obtain buildings at a reasonable cost, and the question is whether we can provide bungalows and charge a rent which gives us a fair interest on our money. The provision of bungalows is not a permanent burden on the tax-payer, because it is one on which a return comes in. The question is whether we should provide these bungalows or provide additional pay in order to enable the officers to obtain the bungalows. The same is the case with regard to Poona, where there is a great scarcity, as every one knows, of housing accommodation. But I can assure this Council that the question of the poorer members of the staff will not be overlooked in this connection.

Your Excellency, I think I have dealt with all the points which I can find recorded on my notes.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—That closes our discussion on the budget. I think it will probably be to the convenience of honourable members if we adjourn now till to-morrow at half past eleven.

The Council then adjourned till 11-30 a.m. on Wednesday the 25th July 1917.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. A Bill further to amend the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, and the Bombay Local Boards Act, 1884 (Bill No. VI of 1916); second reading. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency, I rise to propose the second reading of the Bill to amend the District Municipal Act, 1901, and the District Local Boards Act, 1884. This bill was read a first time in the December meeting and referred to a select committee for consideration.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS moves the second reading of the bill.

The select committee subjected the bill to a prolonged and careful scrutiny and finally in a unanimous report recommended some rather drastic changes. Their report indicating the nature of these changes is on the table of the honourable members of this Council.

One change in particular which might be held to alter the scope of the bill is that touched on in paragraph 7 of the committee's report in which the committee suggest that the provisions of the Local Boards Act regarding corrupt practices should be brought into line with those in the Municipal Act.

In view of the enlargement of the scope of the bill a report was made to the Government of India for their sanction, who, subject to certain remarks and suggestions have accorded their approval. As the result of the Government of India's criticism, I shall have later to propose some small amendments. Otherwise the bill now presented to this Council is in substance the same as that submitted by the select committee with their report. I venture to hope that this bill will be held to represent an honest attempt to deal with a very difficult question, and that the result of the act when passed by this Council will be to introduce greater purity in all municipal and local board elections.

With these remarks I now move the second reading of the bill.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the second reading of this bill. I am convinced that this measure when it passes into law will help materially to secure purity in our municipal and local board elections. So far as I could understand the attitude of non-official members of this Council at the first reading of this bill, they raised various objections to some of the clauses in the bill as it then stood. I have once more gone through the speeches of the honourable members and I find, there were six points in which consideration was necessary. It was contended that it was not right that a candidate should be made criminally responsible for the acts of his agent. We in the select committee considered this point very carefully and agreed with the view expressed at the first reading, and therefore, in the bill as amended by us we have provided that a candidate should not be held criminally responsible for the acts done by his agent unless those acts were done with the knowledge or consent of the candidate. The second point raised at the first reading was whether the words "any gratification whatever other than legal remuneration" as used in the draft bill then before the Council were not too vague and indefinite. Of course, we considered this point also and we came to the conclusion that the words "money or other valuable consideration" should be substituted for the words "any gratification whatever other than legal remuneration" in the definition of corrupt practices in the bill as amended by us. The third point raised was with regard to the last clause of the bill. It was contended that the clause as drafted empowered the district judge to give sanction to any person who applied to him irrespective of the question of any petition to set aside the election by a civil petition and such a procedure would open a wide door to vexatious prosecutions. We considered that aspect of the question in the select committee and the bill as amended provides that no application for sanction could be entertained by the district judge for sanction unless the matter had been disposed of in a civil petition to set aside election. One more point raised by non-official members has, I am afraid, not been considered at all by the select committee. Under section 22 (2) of the District Municipal Act, when the district judge decides a civil petition to set aside an election, that decision is final and conclusive. This Council will remember that two years ago, I think it was in 1914, when a bill to amend the Municipal Act was under consideration the then select committee recommended unanimously that a provision should be inserted at the earliest opportunity to provide for an appeal to the High Court at least on matters on law. The honourable mover of this bill was also then a member of that select committee. I shall read to this Council just that portion of the recommendation of the select committee:

"Under section 22 (2) of the Bombay District Municipal Act the decision of a district judge in the matter of election petitions is final and conclusive. Our attention has been drawn to the fact that in England appeals to the High Court on points of law involved in election petitions are allowed. We recommend therefore that section 22 (2) of the Bombay District Municipal Act be amended so as to admit of appeals on points of law to the High Court from the orders of a district judge with regard to enquiries in election petitions."

It was contended that opportunities should now be taken to insert the necessary provision in this bill. The only objection why the select committee did not deal with the question was that it was thought there was some objection to such a clause being inserted without going to the Government of India. Your Excellency is, however, aware that this bill did go to the Government of India and there was no objection to including a provision regarding appeals on a matter of law to the High Court. Perhaps, however, the honourable member in charge of the bill will explain why it was not possible to include such a clause. There are two other points which were urged at the first reading. One was with regard to the term of disqualification. At the first reading objection was taken that the period of 7 years was too long a period and that it should be curtailed to 4 or 5 years. I understand my honourable friend Mr. GARUD has got an amendment on this point. We seriously considered that aspect of the question in the select committee and as my honourable friend Mr. CURTIS met us on the most important points raised by us we thought it right not to press this point. Besides, we considered very carefully the arguments advanced by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS in the select committee, namely, that it was after all a period not exceeding 7 years and that the magistrate was not debarred under the bill from imposing disqualification for a lesser period. We thought there was great force in what the Honourable Mr. CURTIS said and we therefore allowed the clause to stand. It is conceivable, as the Honourable Mr. CURTIS then put it, that cases may arise where it may be justifiable for a magistrate to impose on the offenders disqualification for 7 years. Under the circumstances I think my [illegible] Mr. GARUD will see his way to withdraw his amend[illegible] raised was with regard to the question, whether a m[illegible]s amendment. It is only pal elections should not also be disqualified fo[illegible] versa. We very carefully considered this that, if a man is found guilty of cor[illegible] right that he should be allowed to stand as a candidate or vote at a local board election. If corrupt practice disqualifies him for a municipal election, there is absolutely no reason why he should remain qualified for a local board election. The matter may be left to the discretion of the magistrate to say whether he should be disqualified for both the elections or not. I understand my honourable friend Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE has got an amendment on the subject and I trust he will appreciate our point of view. With these words I support the second reading of the bill. With your Excellency's permission I would like to bring to your notice one amendment that stands in the name of the Honourable Mr. CURTIS. The subject matter of that amendment was not discussed in the select committee. I wish my honourable friend had put it before the committee for their consideration.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—I think the details of each amendment had better be discussed when we come to them later. When the honourable member starts complaining as to why these amendments have all been undertaken I may inform the Council that the bill was referred to the Government of India and these amendments have been undertaken by direction of the Government of India, and therefore, perhaps, the remarks of individual members may be deferred until we come to them.

Bill read a second time

Motion for the second reading was put to the vote and carried.

Clause 1 was put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Clause 2. Item No. 1 (a). The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—My Lord, the amendment which I propose runs as follows:—

"Delete the words 'or hold out any promise of individual profit' in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of new section 22A."

The whole clause runs as follows :—

"Whoever in any election under this Act, directly, or indirectly by himself or by any other person on his behalf, shall, with a view to inducing any voter to give or to refrain from giving a vote in favour of any candidate, offer or give any money or valuable consideration or hold out any promise of individual profit or hold out any threat of injury, to any person and ".

I only object to the words "hold out any promise of individual profit" on the ground that the words "individual profit" are too wide as they may include even small considerations which ought not to be the subject of prosecutions.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—What does the honourable member mean by a small concession?

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI:—These words could include all kinds of treating. Suppose a man gives a small cup of tea it may come under "individual profit." If a man takes a voter in a carriage, it may come under "individual profit." There are rules with reference to treating under the English Law but they are subject to certain limitations which are not provided here in this bill. It would be better not to impose any criminal liabilities to an extent which might deter honest men from coming forward as candidates and give rise to unnecessary, malicious and vexatious prosecutions. In the old bill which was brought before us in 1914 the words "any gratification whatever" were at first introduced but were subsequently omitted particularly on the ground that it might lead to prosecutions to a large extent. On the same ground and agreed with the words "individual profit" may be omitted. Moreover, it is to as amended by us we ase of a petition to the district judge to set aside the minally responsible for time is allowed, but for a prosecution the present bill with the knowledge or consen Sub-secton (6) says that no prosecution shall be first reading was whether the wehs. So it is not immediately that a prosecution may take place, and if people are illdisposed they may take advantage of the 6 months' time allowed and get up some evidence and any candidate who has been elected will have to face proceedings unnecessarily. That is my reason for proposing to omit these words.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I must point out to the honourable member that his amendment is not complete. The words "hold out any promise of individual profit" appear in sub-section (1) (a) of section 22A. They relate to the persons who hold out a promise of individual profit. The words "individual profit" also appear in sub-section (2): "Whoever being qualified to vote at any election under this act or claiming to be so qualified, accepts or obtains or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain for himself or for any other person any money or valuable consideration or any individual profit as a motive or reward for giving or forbearing to give his vote in any such election shall be liable to a fine not exceeding one hundred rupees for every such offence." Now, the result of the honourable member's amendment, if it is carried into law, is that a person who offers a cup of tea will escape punishment; the gentleman who drinks it is liable to pay Rs. 100 fine for every cup of tea. I may say incidentally that the contrary is the case with reference to his amendment which comes later in section 25A. There the man who offers a cup of tea remains liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 200; the person who drinks it escapes, if the amendment is carried. Now, sir, the explanation of the words "individual profit" here already appears in section 22 of the main act, and it was taken from Cap. 17 and 18 Vic., the first English statute dealing with these corrupt practices. I venture to think that its use has stood the test of a good many years' working and its retention is abolutely necessary if the penal sections of this law are to have the effect which we all hope they will. The honourable gentleman's legal experience is much greater than mine but I think he will see that in order to show as completely as possible all the various kinds of illicit considerations of a valuable kind which are likely to be held out to voters who are willing to give their votes, the retention of these words is absolutely necessary. I therefore beg to move that this amendment be rejected.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—May it please your Excellency,—My object is to omit the words "or hold out any promise of individual profit" wherever they appear and if they are omitted——

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Order, order. I cannot have any explanation from the honourable member.

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI:—The Honourable Mr. CURTIS has referred to my motion with reference to these words as they appear in clause 2 and with reference to that I have to explain my position. My lord, the words "money or valuable consideration" will include all the more serious cases of individual profit and, the further express addition of the words "individual profit" is unnecessary. I do not propose that a man who offers tea should escape and a man who receives tea should alone be proceeded against. My contention is that in petty cases there ought not to be any room for unnecessary criminal proceedings and the more serious criminal cases are sufficiently covered by the words "money or valuable consideration." This is what I have to particularly urge in support of my amendment.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Clause 2. Item No. 1 (b). Delete the explanation to sub-section (1) and sub-section (2) of the said section. The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI:—I do not press this amendment. It is only consequential to the amendment which has been lost.

CORRUPT PRACTICES BILL.

[The President; Mr. G. S. Curtis; Mr. Siddhanath Dhonddev Garud.] [25TH JULY 1917.]

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Clause II, Item No. (2). The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—The amendment which stands in my name is:

"In sub-section (3) of new section 22A for the words 'for a term of years not exceeding seven from the date of such conviction be disqualified at the discretion of the Court' the following words shall be substituted, namely: 'for such period not exceeding seven years from the date of the conviction as the court may direct, be disqualified'."

The previous wording of these provisions left it somewhat doubtful whether the discretion of the magistrate is exercisable only in the matter of the period during which the disqualification is to last or whether the magistrate has discretion to disqualify or not to disqualify at all. The Government of India have given their sanction to the portions of the bill which require sanction on the understanding that the former is the intention of the bill and that it will be amended to express that intention more clearly. The Council will notice that under the Madras District Municipal Act, 1884, on which these provisions are modelled, disqualification is compulsory in similar circumstances and that it is for seven years in all cases. In England also conviction for corrupt practices entails disqualification for sitting as a member of the body concerned, and for voting, both in the case of Parliament and in the case of municipal election.

Therefore I have the honour to move that in sub-section (3) of new section 22A for the words "for a term of years not exceeding seven from the date of such conviction be disqualified at the discretion of the Court" the following words be substituted, namely:—"for such period not exceeding seven years from the date of the conviction as the court may direct, be disqualified.

The amendment was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Mr. GARUD.

The Honourable Mr. SIDDANATH DHONDDEV GARUD:—Your Excellency,—The amedment which I have to propose reads thus:—

"In sub-section (3) of new section 22A, for the words 'a term of years not exceeding seven' substitute the words 'a term of years not exceeding four'."

Sub-section (3) of new section 22A which I wish to amend reads as follows:—"Every person convicted under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall for a term of years not exceeding seven from the date of such conviction be disqualified at the discretion of the Court from voting at any municipal election or at any election to a local board constituted under the Bombay Local Boards Act, 1884, and from being a councillor in any municipal district or a member of any such local board."

The words "seven years," your Excellency, appear to be taken from the English statutes. But it must not be forgotten that our elections to these local bodies are triennial and that if a man is disqualified for seven years, he loses his right to vote not only at the next election after that in which he is disqualified but at two subsequent elections. If it is thought necessary to disqualify him for all future elections I would not object to amending that section in that way. But if it is thought necessary merely to take away his right at the next election, then I submit that a period of four years is all that is necessary. If an inquiry takes place that inquiry will probably last for some time after the election in which he is disqualified and the period of four years will cover the next election but the period of seven years might extend also to the third election. If that is not the intention of the framers of this clause, the word 'seven' might I submit be deleted and the word 'four' might be inserted in its place.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I rise to oppose this amendment. The period of seven years was originally adopted from the Madras act where, we presume, it was copied from the English act. The intention of the English act always has been to punish offenders in this way as severely as possible.

The period of seven years, as the Honourable Mr. GARUD points out, may include and probably will include two elections after the election in which this convicted person has been found guilty of corrupt practice or misconduct.

I venture to think that the punishment is not a very severe one. If this person has been convicted, as he will have been after full inquiry by a judicial officer, of misconduct, and if he has been disqualified from voting, it is only fitting and suitable that he should be debarred from exercising the privilege which the franchise confers upon him for a reasonable period; and following the example of England and of the Madras Presidency, where a similar provision exists, the period may well be fixed at seven years.

I, therefore, beg to move, sir, that this amendment be rejected.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Does the honourable member wish to reply?

The Honourable Mr. GARUD:—No, your Excellency.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—The Honourable Mr. GODBOLE.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE:—Your Excellency,—The amendment of which I have given notice reads as follows:—

"In sub-section (3) of new section 22A omit the following words:—(a) 'or at any election to a local board constituted under the Bombay Local Boards Act, 1884' after the words 'Municipal election'."

I have put forward this amendment with the object of mitigating the hardship that will be caused by the disqualification clause.

According to the section as it stands, for every municipal corrupt practice the offender is disqualified from voting not only at municipal elections but also at local board elections, and he is disqualified from being not only in the municipal council but from being a member of the district local board or taluka local board. I think, sir, that this double disqualification will be a very heavy punishment for an offence which is committed not for individual profit but from the intense desire that persons have of serving the public. A person committing such an offence with such motives deserves I think some consideration, and the punishment in such cases certainly ought not to be very heavy.

I therefore propose that the disqualification for municipal corrupt practice should be confined to municipal elections only and to municipal membership, and with that object I have put forward this amendment for the consideration of the Council.

The Honourable Mr. DATTATRAYA VENKATESH BELVI:—Your Excellency,—It is a matter of great regret to me that I cannot agree with my honourable friend Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE in the view which he takes of this provision. It is rather extraordinary to hear that a man who has been tried formally and found guilty of corrupt practices in the case of a municipal election should be at perfect liberty to stand as a candidate and to vote in the case of a local board election. This is rather a very novel argument to me. I believe I shall be able, by putting before my honourable friend a parallel instance, to show that if we accept such an argument we shall reach an absurd conclusion. Are we to suppose that a magistrate who is convicted of bribery may apply for a subordinate judge's post and may be appointed a subordinate judge because in the one case he was convicted only as a magistrate and in the other case he wishes to serve as a civil judge? My view is that local boards and municipalities represent only two branches of one institution, namely, local self-government, and it will be wrong to accept this amendment of my honourable friend Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE. I do not believe that it is necessary to give a longer reply to his argument. The amendment is no doubt conceived with the best of motives. My honourable friend says that a man who practises corrupt practices does so not because he wishes to gain anything personally but because he is intensely anxious to serve the public. I beg to differ from the charitable view which my honourable friend takes.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—May I add, sir, to the remarks which have just fallen from the last speaker that local boards and municipalities are not, as it were, independent bodies? There is a provision in both the acts by which one body may work with the other. Now, sir, it would be rather an anomaly if a person who has been found guilty of corrupt practice and declared unfit to hold office or be a member of one body, is allowed to sit on the other and help to decide on questions affecting the internal administration of the body on which he has been held unfit to join. In England, again, in all these matters a conviction for corrupt practices in reference to parliamentary election carries with it a disqualification for municipal, borough and every possible election; in fact, corrupt practice in one election disqualifies the person from voting or holding an office in any other body whatsoever, either permanently or for a period of years. The disqualification proposed in this sub-section carries that principle into effect. For these reasons I beg to move that the amendment be rejected.

The amendment was then put up to the vote and lost.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT.—Amendment 4 (b)—"In sub-section (3) of new section 22A omit the following words:—'or a member of any such local board' at the end of sub-section (3)." The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE:—Your Excellency,—I beg to withdraw that amendment.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT: The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I rise to propose the following amendment:—

"In sub-section (5) of new section 22A the words 'with the previous sanction or' shall be deleted".

In reply to the reference which this Government made on the report of the select committee, the Government of India pointed out that it is probable that the revision of the Criminal Procedure Code will result in material changes in the law relating to sanctions to prosecute and the Government of India would much prefer that a prosecution should only be instituted on the complaint of the officer holding the election inquiry. It is believed from a practical point of view that the omission of these words will not make much difference, and it is accordingly proposed to delete the words "with the previous sanction of" in sub-section (5) of new section 22A.

CORRUPT PRACTICES BILL.

The amendment was then put to the vote and carried.

Clause 2 was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Clause 3, the Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I rise to move the following amendment:—

In sub-section (2) of new section 25 for the words "the District Judge or such other Judge as may be appointed by the Governor in Council on this behalf" the following words shall be substituted namely:—

"An enquiry shall thereupon be held by a Judge appointed by the Governor in Council, either specially for the case or for such cases generally, and such Judge".

The object of this amendment is as follows: it has been pointed out by the Government of India that as the district judge is ordinarily the sessions judge of a district and as under section 22 (2) of the Municipal Act and new section 25 (2) of the Local Boards Act the enquiry would probably be held by the district judge, an appeal against a conviction under the bill would lie to the same person who had held the enquiry. While it would be open to Government to appoint for the enquiry a judge other than the district judge, Government considered it advisable to redraft the provisions so as to omit mention of the district judge in section 22 (2) of the Municipal Act and new section 25 (2) of the Local Boards Act. An enquiry will thus be held by a judge appointed by Government in this behalf (either specially or generally), and care will be taken not to appoint for an election enquiry a judge who at the same time holds the office of sessions judge of this particular district.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur GANESH KRISHNA SATHE:—Your Excellency,—Before I make a few observations on this amendment, I only suggest whether it would not be right to ask the PRESIDENT'S permission to take item No. 6 with item No. 14.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—I have no objection; I think it would be useful.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Has the honourable member any particular advantage to point to if we adopt that procedure?

The Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE:—Yes, your Excellency. As the two amendments are identical, much time will be saved by taking them together.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—I think on consideration that we had better take them separately, as they run on rather different lines.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—It would be rather difficult for me to put two amendments to separate clauses at one time.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE:—I abide by your Excellency's ruling, but I crave indulgence to refer to that amendment also in my present remarks.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I have no objection, provided, of course, that when the honourable member comes to the other amendment, he does not speak at too great a length.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE:—Now the changes that are suggested to be made by the amendment proposed by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS are to take away the words "District Judge", etc. and substitute for them this clause—item No. 14—"An enquiry shall thereupon be held by a judge appointed by the Governor in Council, either specially for the case or for such cases generally, and such judge". We have copied this section and have made amendments, so far as the amendments relating to local boards are concerned, on the lines of section 22 of the District Municipal Act. The original section 22, clause (2) runs thus:—"The District Judge or such other Judge as may be appointed by the Governor in Council in this behalf may, after such enquiry as he deems necessary, and subject to the provisions of sub-section (3), pass an order confirming or amending the declared result of the election, or setting the election aside." Then my honourable friends will kindly refer to the definition of the word "Judge" given at page 3 of the District Municipal Act, copies of which have been supplied to us:—"'Judge' shall mean District Judge, Joint Judge, Assistant Judge, Judge of a Court of Small Causes, Subordinate Judge, Joint Subordinate Judge or a Judge appointed under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Acts, 1879 to 1895." This section is on the statute book ever since Act II of 1884 was passed and the usual practice is to take these election petitions to the district judge. He is not invested with these powers in his capacity as a presiding officer over a district court, but as a persona designata he has been invested with this power of hearing and deciding election petitions. The first mentioned officer, i. e., prima facie, the district judge, was authorised to hear these election petitions and it was only left to the Governor in Council to make an appointment of another judge. I quite see that, under the definition of the word "Judge" as given in the section of the act it was always open to Government to appoint any judge they liked for deciding such cases, but I may state here for the information of the Council that at least I am not aware of any cases in which the district judge has been superseded by the appointment of another judge so far as election enquiries are concerned. The reasons which lead me to take objection to the amendment proposed by the honourable member in charge of the bill are these. In the first instance, without meaning any reflection on the subordinate judicial service, I do say that subordinate judges are not as competent to deal with election petitions as the district judges are, and the simple reason for this is that in these matters various technical questions do arise, for which we have to cite English precedents to district judges; even the books are not available in the subordinate courts, and the district judges by their long experience and by their superior training are to my mind better fitted to dispose of these cases.

My second point is that in small taluka head-quarter places when the elections take place, everybody from the officer down to an ordinary rayat knows the whole history of the factions which govern these elections, and it is much better that we should keep out an officer who has previous knowledge about local affairs, and that we should not allow him to sit in judgment upon matters of which he had knowledge as a private gentleman. The reason for suggesting this amendment as given by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS is that if the district judge tries the cases and if he sends the accused to the magistrate on complaint, then he will be debarred from trying the appeal against the conviction. But that is really not a new point, because in civil matters it many times happens that the district judge gives sanction in civil cases which come under his notice, and in those matters either on a reference to the High Court or on an application made by the parties, appeals are transferred from one sessions court to another sessions court wherever an assistant judge is not available. Such cases also are very rare, because in many places, at least in more than half the districts there are assistant and additional judges; so this difficulty I do not think would really arise, and if it did arise there is a provision which is being availed of even now under peculiar circumstances in which sanctions are given by the district judge. Now there is one suggestion which I might make and that is that if it is really intended to avoid any trouble on this account, then would it not meet the wishes of the Government of India if we say "any judge not below the grade of an assistant judge" and substitute these words for those proposed by the honourable member in charge of the bill. In that case we will get an officer of superior grade. We will also avoid the aforesaid inconvenience which is likely to arise by investing the district judges with civil powers in these matters.

CORRUPT PRACTICES BILL.

[25TH JULY 1917.] [Rao Bahadur Ganesh Krishna Sathe; Mr. G. S. Curtis; Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas.]

Then, sir, there is one more point. It is a very small point upon which I want to say a few words. In fact if the suggestion of mine is accepted by the honourable member in charge of the bill, I think I need not dwell at length on that point at all.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Subject to the orders of the higher authorities, I think there is no objection to accepting the honourable member's suggestion.

The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS:—Your Excellency,—I am not at one with the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE in the suggestion he has made for the substitution of the words "any judge not below the grade of an assistant judge." I am entirely for the retention of the old wording under which a district judge will also be an authority for the purpose of deciding these cases. Now, as he has said, up to now, as far as I remember, although the words providing for any other judge being appointed for the purpose remain in the section, the tribunal to which reference has been made for these cases has been almost invariably, I should rather say invariably, the district court, and the adoption of the amendment that has been proposed by the honourable member in charge of the bill would certainly and I think avowedly do away with the jurisdiction of district judges in this matter. That is to say, it will be only those judges that have been appointed by Government who have to decide these cases. My point is that this should not be so, that the jurisdiction of the district judges should be retained and the reason why I wish this to be done is not, as the Honourable Mr. SATHE has put it, that district judges are more competent than subordinate judges, because that, to a certain extent, rather challenges a verdict that you will find on record in Privy Council cases. There have been remarks even by the Privy Council in many cases; it may be that they are rather obsolete reports, but I think they apply to the present time as much as they did to the old times, that subordinate judges are very competent, and from personal experience I may say that there are some subordinate judges who are as competent as district judges. But in spite of that opinion of mine when I say that I am in favour of having district judges for this purpose I say so because district judges always inspire greater confidence, and also for the reason that has been later on suggested by the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE, that subordinate judges may be said to have a kind of unconscious bias in the case, as being to a certain extent cognisant of the ins and outs of the case that has given rise to the corrupt practice in question. As the district judge would be aloof from and outside the scope of these influences, it is more desirable in the interests of justice that the district court should retain its jurisdiction. The substitution of the words "any judge not below the grade of an assistant judge" is I think rather making matters worse than they were before, because under the clause as suggested by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS, a district judge is not excluded. It might be said that he is not excluded in the words suggested by the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE, either, but that is in theory only, because when you have the words "not below the grade of an assistant judge" it will naturally follow that in all cases Government will appoint men who are at the most assistant judges, which will exclude district judges altogether. I do not wish district judges to be excluded. Of course as I have already said, I am cognisant of the fact that even under the clause as it now stands it may be that assistant judges can be appointed at the discretion of Government, but the practice of appointing other judges has never been followed. Because as a matter of fact there are very few cases of this kind, and for these few cases, Government, do not think it worth while to undergo the trouble of making a new appointment of a judge. Cases like these are so few and far between, as not to constitute such a strain upon the working of the district courts as to necessitate the appointment of a fresh judge for the purpose. Therefore I say that the retention of the district judge is desirable.

Then the reason that was suggested by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS for the amendment proposed by him has been, I think, more or less demolished by the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE. As a matter of fact, in cases where the district judge gives sanction for the prosecution of the guilty party, which in practice would also be very rare, say once in three years or five years, it will be very easy to find out an appellate authority, either an assistant judge or any other judge. It happens even in the higher court, that as the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE pointed out, that difficulty has to be faced in cases where the district judge or civil judge has given sanction, and those cases certainly in practice are more frequent than cases of this particular class. Therefore that difficulty should not be taken into consideration at all, but the primary consideration that a tribunal as competent as the district court should have jurisdiction over these matters should not be lost sight of. For these reasons I would suggest that the original words be retained.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—Your Excellency,—I too join with my honourable friend Mr. Harchandrai in opposing this amendment.

When an appeal is to be allowed it is much better that a judge of the district judge's standing should hear the same, and if any other judge is required to be appointed he should be a district judge or a judge of equal experience.

So far as assistant judges are concerned they are mostly junior officers and do not possess the same experience which district judges or first class subordinate judges possess. I think it will avoid all controversy if we allow section 25 to remain as it is, and allow these cases to be taken up only before the district judges; if there be in any case some serious objection to its being heard by any particular district judge, then it should be left to Government to refer it to another district judge or to appoint any judge, who will be of the same grade and experience as the district judge. That would be much better than allowing assistant judges to hear cases like these.

The Honourable Mr. DATTATRAYA VENKATESH BELVI:—Your Excellency,—I oppose the amendment moved by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS. My grounds are briefly these:—Just as it is not wise to take medicine when it is not wanted, so it is equally unwise to amend an existing law when an amendment is not called for. The existing sections have worked satisfactorily and there is no reason at all why any change in the wording of the provisions of section 22 is necessary. The proposed new section 25, sub-section (2) only copies the wording of the main act. My view is that the law has worked hitherto very well and now that decisions in election cases are made to give rise to criminal proceedings under certain circumstances, it is much better that district judges should be allowed to retain their jurisdiction. After all the district judge is the highest judicial authority in a district, his court is the highest court of civil jurisdiction, and it is much better that the confidence of the people in the administration of justice should not be shaken by accepting an amendment of the kind which is now before the Council.

My honourable friend Rao Bahadur SATHE says that the words "or a judge not below the rank of an assistant judge" may be inserted in the amendment. I am opposed to this suggestion of my honourable friend. I do not mean to make any disparaging remarks on the competency of assistant judges, but I have known a large number of assistant judges in my practice at the bar, and my view is that it is much better that these election cases are tried by district judges themselves personally, and I submit that it would be impolitic to accept the amendment which has been moved by the Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

For these reasons I oppose the amendment.

CORRUPT PRACTICES BILL.

[25TH JULY 1917.] [Sir Mahadev Bhaskar Chaubal; Mr. Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel.]

The Honourable Sir MAHADEV BASKAR CHAUBAL:—Your Excellency,—I think it is pertinent to remark that the argument that the wording of section 25 of the proposed bill follows mainly the wording of section 22 of the District Municipal Act, is not conclusive if any advantage or convenience is secured by the proposed change in the wording of this clause of the bill. I think the main point to notice in the remarks and observations made by the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE is that notwithstanding the language of section 22 so far as we have known, these enquiries have not been entrusted in the mofussil to either a judge of a Small Cause court or to a subordinate judge. Therefore the omission of these in the wording of the new clause will only be in accordance with the prevailing practice. Such enquiries have been conducted principally by the district judge, so far as I know, and in some few cases perhaps by an assistant judge; but the wording of clause (2) of section 22 says:—"The District Judge or such other Judge as may be appointed by the Governor in Council" Therefore it is quite within the powers of Government under the present wording of the act to appoint in the first instance for the disposal of election petitions an assistant judge. The advantage of the proposal made by the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE to my mind is the great administrative convenience which would result from the adoption of the suggestion made by him, because honourable members will notice that when an election enquiry has taken place before an assistant judge, and he finds that there has been a corrupt practice committed, then the prosecution in the first instance will be on the complaint of such assistant judge before a magistrate. Now if the magistrate convict the accused, the sections or clauses of the bill provide an appeal, which can be heard conveniently by the district judge, but if the election enquiry in the first instance was before the district judge the prosecution for corrupt practice must be on his complaint, and you make it impossible for him to hear the appeal. Therefore, although no doubt the original wording of the act is slightly modified to the extent that you do not bring in the subordinate judge or the Small Cause court judge, you retain, according to the suggestion made by the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE, the district judge and the assistant judge, and either of these two officers may be appointed; so that, if the original enquiry has been held by the assistant judge, the appeal from the conviction can be heard by the district judge. If the original enquiry has been held by the district judge, the appeal can be heard by the assistant judge. That is a great administrative convenience which should not be lost sight of.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH:—Your Excellency,—I am of opinion that the language used in section 22, clause (2) ought to be retained. The other alternative suggested by the amendment appears to me to be considerably more difficult to work. As things now stand people know where to go to, who is the officer they have to approach and which is the Court before which they have to make their applications; but if in every case either the orders of Government have to be obtained or a special officer is appointed for the disposal of these cases, it cannot but be that there would be much delay and considerable inconvenience would be caused and the confidence which the public ordinarily have in the district judges would be largely shaken. The inconvenience that has been pointed out as likely to arise in certain cases under particular conditions is, I submit, insignificant when compared with the inconvenience which would otherwise arise, and I therefore consider that the best course would be to leave the language of the present clause as it is.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I regret very much that I am unable to accept the view taken by the Honourable Messrs. HARCHANDRAI, PAREKH and BELVI. I fully appreciate the argument of my honourable friend Sir MAHADEV CHAUBAL on behalf of Government that if the words suggested by my honourable friend Rao Bahadur SATHE are substituted the situation would be met. As the law stands at present there is nothing to prevent the Governor in Council to appoint any judge, for instance, a sub-judge for the matter of that. If that is the state of existing law I should much prefer the suggestion of my honourable friend Rao Bahadur SATHE which, if accepted, would exclude sub-judges altogether. Under these circumstances I support the proposal of the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—The only point I wish to make in regard to the Honourable Mr. PAREKH'S observation is with regard to uncertainty, that if the law is left as it is in the original Act of 1901 and if the district judge holds an enquiry under section 22, then there must be very considerable uncertainty as to who is to hear the eventual criminal appeal.

The Honourable Mr. BELVI:—The assistant judge.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—That may not be certain, there may not be an assistant judge at the particular station. I think the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI himself said that there might be an appeal to a High Court or the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. That must lead to uncertainty and it is most expensive. I submit that if the amendment as it stands in the form proposed by the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE and agreed to by Government is accepted it would suit all circumstances of the case.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT then put the amendment, which after the adoption of the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE'S suggestion ran as follows:—

"In sub-section (2) of new section 25 for the words 'the District Judge, or such other Judge as may be appointed by the Governor in Council on this behalf' the following words shall be substituted, namely:—

"An enquiry shall thereupon be held by a Judge not below the rank of an Assistant Judge, appointed by the Governor in Council, either specially for the case or for such cases generally and such Judge," to the vote and it was carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Amendment to clause 3.

"(a) Delete the words 'or holds out any promise of individual profit' in clause (a) of sub-section (4) of section 25".

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—My lord,—I beg to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment by leave withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Amendment to clause 3.

"(b) Delete the explanation to sub-section (4) of the said section".

Does the honourable member wish to move it?

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—No, my lord, I beg to withdraw it.

Amendment by leave withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Amendment to clause 3.

"In sub-section (6) of new section 25, for the word 'seven' substitute the word 'four.'"

CORRUPT PRACTICES BILL.

[25TH JULY 1917.] [Mr. Siddanath Dhonddev Garud; the President; Mr. Shridhar Balkrishna Upasani; Mr. G. S. Curtis; Dewan Bahadur Kashinath Ramchandra Godbole.]

The Honourable Mr. SIDDANATH DHONDDEV GARUD:—Your Excellency,—I beg to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment by leave withdrawn.

Clause 3 was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Amendment to clause 4.

"In sub-section (2) of new section 25-A, omit the words 'or any individual profit', and the explanation to sub-sections (1) and (2)."

The Honourable Mr. UPASANI.

The Honourable Mr. SHRIDHAR BALKRISHNA UPASANI:—My lord,—I beg to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment by leave withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Amendment to clause 4. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I beg to move that:—

"In sub-section (3) of new section 25-A, for the words 'for a term of years not exceeding seven from the date of such conviction be disqualified at the discretion of the Court' the following words shall be substituted, namely:—

"For such period not exceeding seven years from the date of the conviction as the Court may direct, be disqualified."

The alterations are similar to those already provided by the Council in sub-section (3) of new section 22-A.

The amendment was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Amendment to clause 4. The Honourable Mr. GARUD.

"In sub-section (3) of new section 25-A, for the word 'seven' substitute the word 'four.'"

The Honourable Mr. SIDDANATH DHONDDEV GARUD:—Your Excellency,—I beg to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment by leave withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Amendment to clause 4. The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE.

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur KASHINATH RAMCHANDRA GODBOLE:—Your Excellency,—I also withdraw my amendments reading:—

"In sub-section (3) of new section 25-A, omit the following words:—

'(a) or at any Municipal Election' after the words 'Election to a Local Board.'

'(b) or a Councillor in any Municipal District' at the end of sub-section (3)."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Does the honourable member wish to withdraw both the amendments?

The Honourable Dewan Bahadur GODBOLE:—Yes, your Excellency.

Both amendments by leave withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—Amendment to clause 4. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—Your Excellency, I have the honour to move the following amendment :—

"In sub-section (5) of new section 25-A, the words 'with the previous sanction or' and the word 'District' shall be deleted."

The amendment was put to the vote and carried.

Clause 4 was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—Amendment to clause 5. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—Your Excellency,—I have the honour to move the following amendment, accepting the modification proposed by the Honourable Rao Bahadur SATHE in sub-section (2) of new section 25 of the Local Boards Act :—

"(a) After sub-section (1) the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely :—

'(2) in sub-section (2) of section 22 of the Bombay Municipal Act, 1901, for the words 'The District Judge or such other Judge as may be appointed by the Governor in Council in this behalf' the following words shall be substituted, namely :—

'An enquiry shall thereupon be held by a Judge not below the rank of an Assistant Judge appointed by the Governor in Council, either specially for the case or for such cases generally, and such Judge' ".

The amendment was put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—Amendment 14 (b) to clause 5. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS :—Your Excellency,—I beg to move the same as follows :—

" Sub-section (2) shall be numbered as sub-section (3)."

The amendment was put to the vote and carried.

Clause 5 was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—Amendment to the preamble. The Honourable Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS :—Your Excellency,—I beg to move that—"in the preamble, after the words 'The Bombay Local Boards Act, 1884;' the following words shall be inserted, namely :—

'And whereas the previous sanction of the Governor-General required by sub-section (2) of section 79 of the Government of India Act, 1915, has been obtained for the passing of this Act';"

The reason for the insertion of these words is as follows. New sub-sections 4 and 7 of proposed new sections 22-A and 25-A require the previous sanction of the Government of India under section 79 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915, because they introduce exceptions to the ordinary procedure laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code. This sanction has now been given and hence the present amendment.

The amendment to the preamble was put to the vote and carried.

The preamble was then put to the vote and carried.

CORRUPT PRACTICES BILL.; LOCAL BOARDS BILL.

[25TH JULY 1917.] [Mr. G. S. Curtis; the President; Mr. Vithalbhai Jhaverbhai Patel.]

The Honourable Mr. Curtis moves the Third Reading of Bill No VI of 1916

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—Your Excellency,—I now have the honour to move that this bill be read for the third time. I do not know that any very extended remarks are called for from me but there is one observation which fell from the Honourable Mr. PATEL to which I think I should refer. Though he himself was a member of the committee which signed the unanimous report on this bill, he has apparently taken exception to certain action taken during the proceedings of the committee, He criticises the bill because he does not find in it any provision which would allow an appeal to the High Court from the decision of the Judge making an election enquiry under section 22 of Act III of 1901. Well, sir, it is the fact that that point was brought up for discussion in the select committee, but it was pointed out that there was no reference to the possibility of an appeal to the High Court in the bill as originally referred to the select committee, and that such a provision could not be inserted in this bill without a modification of the constitution of the High Court which, in all probability, it would not be possible to secure. It is still open to the Honourable Mr. PATEL, if he likes, to take separate action to secure that the constitution of the High Court may be so amended that they may take cognizance of these election enquiries carried out by the judicial officers appointed thereto in their personal capacity by his Excellency the Governor in Council. It must be remembered, however, that the election enquiry is held by an officer, not by a Court, and that there have been cases in the past in which the High Court has refused to interfere and it is extremely doubtful whether if the matter were taken up the amendment of the constitution of the High Court which the Honourable Mr. PATEL asks for would be made. In any case I think it is a matter for separate consideration altogether. We must now I think congratulate ourselves that this bill, the subject-matter of which was first put before this Council in 1914, has finally after prolonged consideration passed into law and been ratified by this Council. We all hope, I think, that it will effect considerable improvement in the purity of elections, a purity which hitherto according to my experience left much to be desired. With these words I now beg to move the third reading of this bill

Bill read a third time.

Motion for the third reading was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Motion for withdrawal of the bill to provide for increasing the number of elective members of district local boards and other matters (Bill No. I of 1917). The Honourabe Mr. CURTIS.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I rise to a point of order. I should like to know under what rule this motion has been brought forward before this Council.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I do not think there is any definite rule on this particular matter. It has been the custom of this Council to deal with such matters of withdrawal in this way. It certainly would be extremely inconvenient if the PRESIDENT did not have power to take action in case of withdrawal.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—May I be allowed to say one word. With regard to the Gujarat Talukdars Bill no such motion was made and yet the bill never saw the light of day.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—Did that bill come into the Council?

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—Yes, your Excellency. That bill was read for the first time and referred to a select committee.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I quite see the honourable member's point. It may be that Government may have been slightly irregular in the matter. But in the present circumstances I do not think the Council will object to a formal withdrawal of the bill, and I think it would be very desirable if it became the settled rule that when a bill comes into the Council, it should be formally withdrawn before the Council so that it shall have an opportunity to oppose the motion if honourable members feel inclined to do so.

The Honourable Mr. G. S. CURTIS:—May it please your Excellency,—A few remarks only will be necessary from me with reference to this motion. I ask for formal leave to withdraw this bill for the amendment of the Local Boards Act, 1884

This bill was originally prepared in June last with a view to presentation to this Council at the September session. But owing to unavoidable delays sanction was not received until December. So that the bill was read a first time in March last. Meanwhile the object of the bill had been secured to a large extent by executive orders and the preparation of a larger measure designed to replace the existing act was taken in hand. It is hoped that the larger measure will be ready at an early date.

Government are, therefore, of opinion that it will be better in the circumstances to withdraw the bill. They consider that the discussion which has taken place both in this Council and in the select committee will not be without its usefulness, as several points of interest have received a great deal of attention, and the select committee have also obtained a great deal of information. But in view of the fact that the larger measure is now in hand and may, it is hoped, be introduced at a not very distant date, I think that it is undesirable to proceed with this minor measure.

I may add with reference to what has fallen from the Honourable Mr. PATEL that having regard to the fact that a larger measure has to be brought forward, it would be more suitable and more formal that there should be a formal withdrawal of this minor measure.

For these reasons, sir, I now beg to move for leave to withdraw this bill.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support this motion. In doing so I must congratulate your Excellency's Government on the bold and statesmanlike decision that your Excellency's Government has arrived at in connection with this bill.

This Council will remember the rather heated discussion we had on this bill at the first reading, and speaking for myself I am very much grateful to your Excellency's Government for this decision of Government.

However much one might regret the waste of public time and public expenditure so far involved, all is well that ends well.

The motion was then put to the vote and carried.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—A bill to provide for the extension of primary education in municipal districts in the Bombay Presidency other than the City of Bombay (Bill No. II of 1917)—First Reading—the Honourable Mr. PATEL.

The Honourable Mr. VITHALBHAI JHAVERBHAI PATEL:—May it please your Excellency,—I rise to move the first reading of a bill to provide for the extension of primary education in municipal districts in the Bombay Presidency other than the City of Bombay. Honourable members will recollect that last December this Council considered a resolution which I had ventured to submit to its judgment, recommending that an early beginning should be made in the direction of making elementary education free and compulsory throughout the Presidency, by introducing it in the first instance within the limits of its municipal districts and that a mixed committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to frame and submit definite proposals in that behalf. In the interesting debate which ensued on the occasion, your Excellency's Government opposed the resolution on the ground that it was constitutionally improper for a local Government to endeavour to support a resolution, which as your Excellency then said "went straight in the face of the confirmed and decided opinion of the Government of India," viz., that for financial and administrative reasons of decisive weight the Government of India had in their resolution, dated the 21st February 1913, refused to recognize the principle of compulsory education. I refused to believe that the Government of India would adhere to their policy of pre-war times and did not, therefore, accept the constitutional objection raised by your Excellency's Government. The resolution was then put to vote and lost. Thereafter I prepared this draft bill and gave notice to the Secretary of the Council of a motion for leave to introduce it. Your Excellency's Government, as required by the instructions of the Government of India regarding legislation in local Councils, transmitted the draft bill to the Government of India. That Government considered the draft bill and intimated to your Excellency's Government that they had no objection to the principle underlying it. Your Excellency's Government thereupon communicated to me the decision of the Government of India through their legal department. As soon as I received that communication I moved your Excellency to order, under sub-rule 5 of rule 28 of the rules for the conduct of Council business, the publication in the Bombay Government Gazette of the bill, although no motion for leave to introduce it had been made. Your Excellency very kindly accepted my request and the bill with the statement of objects and reasons was, under the orders of your Excellency, published in the Bombay Government Gazette Under these circumstances, the bill is set down on the agenda for the first reading.

Before I proceed to discuss the various clauses of the bill I should like to take the opportunity of expressing on my behalf, on behalf of my non-official colleagues in the Council and on behalf of the people of this Presidency our deep debt of gratitude to your Excellency personally and to the members of your Excellency's Government for the support your Government gave to this bill in reporting it to the Government of India. The bill is, as your Excellency is well aware, the first of its kind and first rate in importance and the most momentous ever discussed in any provincial Legislative Council. If the bill passes into law, it will ever remain as an enduring monument of your Excellency's work in India and your name will be permanently associated with compulsory education in this country.

In moving the first reading of this bill I do think I shall be justified in detaining the Council by dwelling on the desirability and necessity of introducing compulsion in the system of our elementary education. The country at large has, with almost one voice, applauded the principle since the days of the late Mr. GOKHALE, who set the ball rolling in 1910. Your Excellency's Government and the Government of India have now come round to our view. My task, therefore, is much simplified. I should indeed have been very glad, if Government themselves had come forward to introduce compulsion throughout the Presidency, both in urban as well as in rural areas; but since that cannot be, the only alternative is for local bodies to be empowered to take the initiative and introduce compulsion with the sanction and under the control of Government. Local bodies, however, cannot take the initiative under the existing law and that is the reason why this bill has been introduced. I am aware that there are apprehensions entertained in some quarters as to how compulsion will be regarded by the people. It is said it is necessary to proceed cautiously. I have, therefore, proposed in this bill that the experiment should first be made in urban areas and not in rural areas. I have also taken care, in order that the bill may be acceptable to Government, to provide sufficient safeguards to prevent any misuse by any local body.

The honourable members will find in clause 3 that the issue of notification by any municipality making primary education compulsory in its area is made subject to the previous sanction of the Government. Clause 4 requires the municipality to make such provision as the educational department considers necessary and sufficient for primary education before issue of the notification. Clause 5 provides that the resolution of the municipality regarding the issue of the notification shall be supported by at least two-thirds of the councillors present at the meeting. Clause 16 imposes obligation on the municipality issuing the notification to maintain such staff, buildings and appliances for its schools as the educational department may from time to time require. The clause further provides that all such schools will be open for inspection to the educational department. Clause 17 empowers the Government to cancel any notification issued by a municipality in the event of that body making any default in any of the requirements of the act.

These are some of the important safeguards provided in the bill.

I now invite your attention to clauses in regard to compulsion. Clause 8 makes it obligatory on the parent, which word includes guardian of every child, to cause that child to attend a recognized primary school in the absence of a reasonable excuse. Clause 9 defines the meaning of reasonable excuse. Clause 10 requires the school committee to give due warning to a defaulting parent and empowers the committee to apply to a magistrate who may pass an order directing the parent to cause his child to attend a school. Clause 11 provides that the parent shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 3 for failure to obey an attendance order. Clause 12 provides that the person who employs, either on his own behalf or on behalf of any other person, any child who might be at school under this act, after due warning shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 25.

Clause 14 empowers the municipality to impose an education cess, if the resolution in that behalf has been supported by at least two-thirds of the councillors present at the meeting. This cess, the clause further provides, shall be devoted by the municipality solely for the purposes of primary education.

Clause 15 deals with the question of fee. During the discussion on my resolution in December last the Honourable Sir MAHADEO CHAUBAL with his usual eloquence and emphasis put the view of Government that it was not desirable to make primary education entirely free, at least in municipal areas. At the same time it must be admitted that if you make primary education compulsory you have no right to take fee from people who could not afford. Having regard to these views I have drafted this clause to provide that if the parent of any child declares in writing to the head master his inability to pay fee, the child shall be admitted to such school free of charge. In fact, the declaration by the parent shall per se be regarded as sufficient to entitle the child to exemption.

Now I come to the last clause of the bill. I mean clause 18. This clause is intended to meet the technical objection raised under section 80 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915, by the legal department of your Excellency's Government. That section provides that it shall not be lawful for any member of any local Legislative Council to introduce, without the previous sanction of the Governor, any measure affecting the public revenues of the province or imposing any charge on those revenues. The bill as drafted by me did not contain any provision similar to that contained in clause 18. Speaking for myself, I am of opinion that no express provision of the kind is necessary in a bill which does not purport to affect the public revenues of the province, or impose any charge on those revenues. If you read the bill now before the Council without clause 18, you will find that there is nothing in any of its provisions which purports to affect the provincial revenue or impose any charge on it. The Elementary Education Bill of the late Mr. GOKHALE did not contain such a provision and yet it was allowed to be introduced in spite of section 66 of the Government of India Act, which provides that it shall not be lawful without the previous sanction of the Governor-General to introduce any measure affecting public revenue of India or imposing any charge thereon. The legal department, however, insisted and the legislative department of the Government of India agreed with the legal department that in order to meet the requirement of section 80 (2) of the Government of India Act an express saving clause as contained in clause 18 was necessary. I have, therefore, inserted clause 18 and I have no doubt that the select committee will consider the legal aspect of this question in all its bearings. Similarly with regard to clause 16, which provides that all schools shall be open to inspection by the educational department and municipality shall maintain such staff, buildings and appliances for schools as the said department may from time to time require. I did not insert this clause in the bill as originally drafted. Now you all know that schools maintained by municipality are open to inspection by the educational department and that it is bound to maintain the necessary staff, buildings and appliances as required by the department, if it at all cares for a grant-in-aid. The legislative department of the Government of India probably had not this view before them when they suggested the insertion of this clause. I trust, however, that the select committee will look into this and such other matters and make necessary alterations in the bill.

In conclusion, allow me, your Excellency, to express my gratitude to you personally for directing publication of this bill without any motion for leave to introduce it and thus affording me an early opportunity of moving the first reading thereof.

The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS:—Your Excellency,—This measure is of very great importance as it is calculated to revolutionize the conditions of this country and not only should your Excellency be congratulated upon lending your helping hand to this measure as the Honourable Mr. PATEL has done, but I think the honourable mover should also be congratulated in no small degree, because he has taken a leaf out of the book of the late revered Mr. Gokhale, and we hope that in the fulness of time he will attain to all the greatness of Mr. Gokhale. But whilst congratulating him upon having introduced this measure which will make for the lasting benefit of the country, and I daresay the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S example will be followed in other provinces, I am quite sure that there will be hardly a dissentient voice in supporting the principle of this bill. The procedure, upon which I need not dwell, which will have to be observed ordinarily will be that the bill will be referred to a select committee, and then it will come on for second reading when the details will be gone into and discussed and some of the sections retained or rejected as the case may be. But when a bill of this nature is introduced for the first time, I presume that what is intended in the shape of remarks or expressions of opinion on the part of honourable members is whether they are in support or in opposition to the principle underlying the bill and that the member who is in favour of the principle of the bill, that is, who is in favour of the first reading of the bill, is not at the same time debarred from expressing his opinion with regard to the principle of any particular clause although that particular clause may not be the subject matter of discussion at the first reading. As I understand and as I have from my experience observed in practice, the remarks that fall from honourable members on the first reading are taken as a guide or a clue to the select committee as to the lines of reform which may be followed there. In that regard I should not say that I do not congratulate the Honourable Mr. PATEL upon not having made his bill as complete as possible, but I should like to point out that there are certain details of the bill which do require if not amendment, at least very careful consideration at the hands of the select committee. I think I am quite in order in referring to them.

In the first place, the Honourable Mr. PATEL will remember that when the late Mr. Gokhale inrtoduced his bill in the Supreme Legislative Council, he had tried to meet in anticipation the objections that would have been raised against this measure by providing a number of safeguards, so that nobody should have any reason to complain that Mr. Gokhale had not been far-seeing enough to provide against the inconvenience and the discomfort that the universal application of the bill would give rise to in individual cases. An attempt seems to have been made by the present honourable mover of the bill to do so, but I think that he has rather indulged in the pleasure of leaving the thing severely alone by making a general vague provision in clause 9 by using the words "where the child is prevented from attending school by sickness or other necessary cause." "Other necessary cause" is too wide a phrase to be very definite and clear and might afford a loophole to people to put forward any cause and also afford a loophole to very indulgent school committees to allow any cause to operate as a kind of excuse. I daresay this suggestion will be taken in the proper light by the honourable mover as also by the select committee and some more definite, clear and exhaustive provision will be made to meet the difficulty I am suggesting.

Then, as regards the phraseology, I have a very small suggestion to make. I would rather suggest that instead of using the words "schools committee" the words "school attendance committee" should be used, because we have already got school committees on every municipality and it is not proper that those school commitees should be confounded with the school attendance committees. Those school committees have got jurisdiction over the education of the whole of the municipality, but these committees will be confined only to the compulsory education part of the present bill. That is a very small suggestion and I do not think there will be any difficulty in accepting it.

Then as regards clause 18, I think that it is not necessary to have introduced this clause at all. So far from its having any beneficial effect it will rather have mischievous results and for these reasons. In the first place, as pointed out by the Honourable Mr. PATEL himself, which point I might myself to a certain extent elaborate, the provision of the law to which the Government have appealed for the purpose of insisting on the insertion of this clause is not really applicable at all. On the contrary, it is entirely irrelevant. What is meant by section 80 clause (2) of the Government of India Act, which has been just now referred to by the Honourable Mr. PATEL, is that if there is any bill introduced by a private member which on the very face of it by its provisions is calculated to affect the public revenues or which imposes a charge on the revenues of the province, then that bill should not be introduced without the sanction of the Government. Taking off clause 18, is this bill one which really affects the revenue of the province? Certainly it does not. Probably those who suggested to the Honourable Mr. PATEL, the necessity of inserting this clause, apprehended that the passing of this bill might be made an occasion for important municipalities to make an appeal to Government for grants. Well, I think that apprehension is entirely unfounded, if it did exist, for the simple reason that primarily under section 54 of the District Municipal Act, every municipality is under an obligation compulsorily to make provision for education within its district. But at the same time, instances are not wanting of grants being applied for and granted by Government, but those grants, it must be remembered, are entirely optional.

As a matter of fact the Government of India and the Government of Bombay have been very generous in giving these grants. But there is no legal or statutory obligation upon the Government to give these grants. That is a settled principle which I should expect nobody would challenge seriously. That being so, there was no cause for apprehension that the bill as it was originally framed, minus clause 18, imposed in any way any charge upon the public revenues. I say that in effect this clause is positively mischievous, in this way: that by the presence of this clause if any municipality is of opinion that its financial condition is of such a nature that it cannot make provision to carry out this bill except by extraneous assistance, this clause will always stands in its way. In the first place, that municipality will feel timid in approaching Government for a grant and in the next place if it did approach Government, if any member of Government or any authority of Government is so inclined, they could confront the applying municipality with this section as being a bar; although my own opinion is that even with this clause in existence Government would not be precluded from giving a grant which is, as I said, entirely of an optional nature.

Then there is another clause—probably my remarks might give rise to a difference of opinion—and that is that I cannot congratulate my honourable friend upon the introduction of these words in clause 3 sub-section (1). The words are :—

"With the previous sanction of the local government."

Now, whilst admitting the desirability and the necessity of Government having a kind of control and supervision over the fact that the municipalities have made sufficient financial provision, I cannot agree that the discretion of a municipality apart from that consideration should in any way be fettered by the previous sanction of the local government being necessary. Now, whilst on the face of it the words appear as "local government", in reality and in substance local government means the divisional commissioner, because the local government would act upon the recommendations of the divisional commissioner, and the divisional commissioner upon that of the collector of the district, and in the case of small municipalities the collector avowedly means the assistant collector. Instances would not be wanting of these worthies in the lower ranks who would say with Rudyard Kipling "East is East and West is West and the twain shall never meet" and think that while compulsory education is recognised and firmly established in the West, that is precisely the reason why it should not be introduced in the East. Some gentlemen of this class have sometimes remarked that if you introduce compulsory education how will you be able to get your menial servants? They will also think that they are educated men and they will not take to menial employment. Now if you have any officers permeated with these views, it is likely that if this clause is retained, it would in cases serve as an obstacle to the municipalities in carrying out the provisions of this bill. Therefore knowing that there will be a good deal of objection if I were to move an amendment which moreover would not be carried, I put this forward as a suggestion to the select committee, either to delete this clause altogether or to frame it in such a manner as to obviate the difficulty that I apprehend. With these remarks I congratulate the honourable mover of the bill upon having introduced it, and I heartily support its first reading.

The Honourable Mr. GHULAM MUHAMMAD WALAD KHAN BAHADUR WALI MUHAMMAD BHURGRI :—Your Excellency,—In my province it is admitted that the Muhammadan community is the most backward in education, and coming from that community I cannot leave this opportunity without thanking your Excellency and your Excellency's Government for enabling my honourable friend, Mr. PATEL, to introduce this bill. My lord, it is my community in Sind that will benefit most if this bill is passed into law, and I think every well-wisher of the Muhammadans would like that this bill should be passed into law. In offering a few remarks on this bill,- first of all, I would advert to the remarks of my honourable friend, Mr. HARCHANDRAI, who referred to Mr. Gokhale's bill, and said that certain safe-guarding provisions of that bill have not been included in the bill before the Council. But in view of the fact that Mr. Gokhale's bill was to apply to the whole country including the mofussil, and Mr. PATEL'S bill only to the municipalities, I think that clause 9 of this bill provides all the safeguards that appear to be necessary in the circumstances. Another criticism levelled against my honourable friend Mr. PATEL is on clause 18 of the bill. But with this criticism I quite agree. I may say, sir, that Mr. Gokhale not only had no such clause but Mr. Gokhale went further and contemplated a distribution of the cost of providing elementary education between the local bodies and the local government. That is, it contemplated that the government exchequer should contribute something toward compulsory education. My lord, I have got one apprehension certainly about this clause and I may frankly state it to your Excellency's Government. It has been, since a long time I think, recognized on all hands that the burden of providing elementary education for the masses is legitimately a burden on the shoulders of Government, and if the effect of clause 18 is to shift the burden from Government to the local bodies,

PRIMARY EDUCATION BILL.

I for one would enter my most respectful, but emphatic, protest against such a course, and I would, therefore, appeal to your Excellency's Government that this question may be considered fully in the select committee.

The Honourable Mr. SHERIFF DEVJI CANJI:—Your Excellency,—Ever since the late Mr. Gokhale moved his resolution on elementary education in the Imperial Legislative Council in 1910, the preponderating mass of educated opinion in this country has pronounced itself in favour of the introduction of the principle of compulsion in the system of primary education. The Imperial Government fanged itself against that opinion and definitely laid down their policy against compulsion in their famous resolution of 21st February 1913. Since then resolutions in favour of compulsory education were moved in the several local legislative councils, but the local government did not accept them in pursuance of the policy of the Imperial Government. A resolution of a similar character was moved in this very Council last December by my honourable friend, Mr. PATEL, and we all know that in spite of pronounced opinion in its favour what fate it met with. I am, therefore, glad that the Imperial Government have recognised the value of the responsible public opinion in this country and have accorded their approval to the introduction of voluntary compulsion in the system of our primary education. And it is this approval that has enabled us to consider the bill that is before the Council to-day.

The bill is modest in its scope and permissive in its character. It enables municipalities under certain conditions to make elementary education compulsory within their districts. Sections 3, 4, 5 and 6 provide sufficient safeguards against any hasty action on the part of any municipality. The bill, however, does not enable any municipality which introduces compulsion to make elementary education free also. Now it has been recognised by responsible leaders of public opinion in this country that elementary education must not be made compulsory unless we are prepared to make it free also. It is not just that you should ask a parent to send his child to school under penalty and then compel him to pay for his education. It is true that under section 15 a parent who declares in writing that he is unable to pay the fees of his child shall at once be exempted from paying such fees but it is sure to wound the self-respect of many a parent. The only consolation is that it is an improvement on Mr. Gokhale's bill in this respect that the mere declaration in writing of his inability to pay the fees of his child ipso facto entitles him to this exemption. I however accept it as a temporary compromise between the advocates of free education and those who maintain that we cannot afford to forego the fees charged in primary schools at the present stage of development.

But, my lord, the most retrograde provision in the bill is the one contained in its last section. In plain language it means that the Government shall not be asked and shall not be under any obligation to contribute anything to the funds required for the spread of compulsory elementary education introduced under this act. Now, my lord, it has been recognised by the Government that the education of the masses is the concern of the state and only recently in their resolution of 21st February 1913 the Imperial Government re-affirmed their recognised policy in the following unmistakable words :—

"The propositions that illiteracy must be broken down and that primary education has, in the present circumstances of India, a predominating claim upon the public funds, represent accepted policy no longer open to discussion."

It is not fair to ask any municipality to bear the whole burden of compulsory primary education in its district without a liberal grant from the public funds. We may be prepared to levy a special education cess to bear the burden to some extent of the education of our children, but it would be highly detrimental to the further development of primary education in this Presidency if the Government is statutorily made free from contributing its share in this matter. The charge of primary education should always be considered one of the concerns of the state and the Government should be prepared to deal with it out of public funds. Every rupee that the Government spends in breaking down illiteracy not only brings new joy and new life to the people of this land, but also strengthens the efficiency of its administration in this country. My lord, to my mind section 18 is of such character that I would rather go without such a bill than countenance a policy whereby the local government is statutorily absolved from its recognised duty of bearing the cost of primary education in this Presidency.

Another point to which I wish to invite the attention of this Council is the wide power which is given to the Government under section 17 of cancelling any notification issued by the municipality without any warning or explanation. It is not fair to the municipality to condemn it unheard in a matter of such great importance.

My lord, I hope these remarks will receive the best attention of the Council. I have great pleasure in supporting the principle of this bill.

The Honourable Sardar DULABAWA RAISINGHJI Thakor of Kervada:—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the first reading of the bill. The discussion which took place on this subject at the last session of this Council, so clearly indicated a very strong feeling in favour of a measure of this nature, that I think, it would not be proper for one to take up most valuable time of this Council, specially when the principle is one which is acceptable to every one.

Your Excellency, the honourable mover is so moderate and so very careful in drafting this bill and in giving powers to municipalities to introduce compulsion that it gives a very free hand to each municipality to act in the matter. It is entirely left to such bodies to avail themselves of this opportunity afforded by this bill

I do not share the apprehension based on the ground of expenses and other consideration.

I shall give an instance of our Broach municipality of which I have got some experience. The annual income of the Broach municipality is over Rs. 1,50,000 and we have roughly calculated that if it makes education free in its area it shall only forego Rs. 1,400 or so in fees.

It is true that this measure would involve some more expenses in building schools and employment of larger staff, but these considerations, I venture to submit, should not prevent your Excellency's government from accepting the principle of compulsory education, for any hesitation on the part of Government gives a sort of feeling that the Government is not prepared to encourage a wide spread educational movement.

I, therefore, humbly submit that no other consideration should hamper our advance in education which will be an example to other Presidencies.

With these remarks, I most heartily support the motion for the first reading of the bill.

The Honourable Mr. CHUNILAL VIJBHUKANDAS MEHTA:—Your Excellency,—The Honourable Mr. PATEL is to be congratulated on the persistent devotion which he has given to this subject in finally bringing it before this Council in the shape of this bill. In his speech he has congratulated your Excellency's Government and also the Imperial Government on the approval they have given to the principle of this bill. It seems to me, sir, that your Excellency's Government will have to be further congratulated when the principle of this bill is approved by you, not only in giving sanction to this bill but also in seeing that practical effect is given to it when the bill becomes law. This remark from me is necessary on account of the provision of section 18 in the bill of the Honourable Mr. PATEL. I may incidentally remark that he has left poor Bombay City out of the beneficient action of this bill but I suppose he has done so because of the provision in the City of Bombay Municipal Act by which Government are bound to share in the increased expenditure if compulsory education is provided. But I must remind the Honourable Mr. PATEL that there is also another provision which says that if there should be at any time a change in the general policy of Government, then the Bombay City Municipality will benefit to the same extent as mofussil municipalities. It seems to me, sir, that section 18 is so important that it cannot be lost sight of even when we are considering the principle of this bill What I should like to make perfectly clear is that the select committee should be at perfect liberty to have that clause deleted and ask for a statutory provision for a contribution from Government towards the expense of making education compulsory and free or compulsory and partially free. I consider it so important because I believe that there are very few municipalities indeed, if any, which will be in a position financially to undertake the burden of making education compulsory and free or even partially free without a substantial assistance from the provincial and imperial governments. In this connection I will read, with your Excellency's permission, the passage of the speech of the Honourable Mr. GOKHALE which gives predominant importance to this consideration. He says, " Lastly it is provided that the Government of India should lay down by rules that the proportion of the heavy cost of compulsory education should be divided between the local government and the local bodies concerned it being assumed that the supreme government will place additional resources at the disposal of the local government to enable it to pay its share, the local body being on its side empowered to levy a special educational cess if necessary to meet its share of expenditure. It is obvious ",— and I would like to draw the attention of the members of this Council to this particular sentence,—" that the whole working of this bill must depend, in the first instance, upon the share that Government is prepared to bear towards the cost of compulsory education wherever it is introduced. I find in England that the Parliamentary grant covers about 2/3rd of the total expenditure on elementary education, in Scotland it amounts to more than that, whereas in Ireland it is practically the whole cost. I beg to place before you, my lord, that we are entitled to ask that at least 2/3rds of the expenditure should be borne by the state." Thus an authority like the late Mr. Gokhale has emphatically laid down that so substantial a contribution as 2/3rd must be forthcoming before compulsion is introduced. As he says, the whole working of this bill depends upon it. I think we should not do anything or admit any provision in our bill which can by any stretch of imagination prevent us in future from asking for a contribution from the state. It may be pointed out that the present grants in-aid given by the local government are entirely optional. So they are, but I should like to make it perfectly clear that this clause will not make it impossible for the municipality in future to ask for the grants of the nature that I have mentioned, and there is every reason why the provincial government and the state should undertake to contribute towards the cost of making education compulsory. Education means greater wage-earning power and wage-earning power means greater capacity to be taxed. Without the aid of Government I consider that it would be impossible for this bill to be worked in practice. Then I would like to draw attention of the members to the possible effect which such a course might have upon the aim that we have so much at heart. It may on the one hand happen that the municipality will be actually prohibited on account of financial cost from undertaking this work of compulsory education and on the other hand Government might say that the municipalities have chosen to take the initiative in working the provision, let them bear the cost and let them do it themselves especially as they have not asked for any financial assistance. Such a calamity would be grievous indeed and the cause of making compulsory education free throughout the Presidency would be put back a long number of years. There are various provisions in the bill brought forward by the Honourable Mr. PATEL which call for comment, but I will not take up the time of the Council in dwelling upon them, as I consider that financial assistance is really the fulcrum upon which the whole working of the bill depends. For instance there is the question of fees. I think that the Honourable Mr. PATEL has not even provided the safeguard which the late Mr. Gokhale provided in his bill, making it free for all parents whose income did not amount to or exceed Rs. 10. Mr. Patel has merely left it really to the school committees to decide and the objections to that course are obvious. An enquiry will have to be made which will be in the nature of an inquest and the cost of making these enquiries would be out of proportion to the amount of fees that would be levied. The Honourable THAKOR of Kervada just now told us that the amount in Broach amounted to Rs. 1,400.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL :—May I point out to the honourable member that there is no question of an enquiry in connection with this? The declaration is to be accepted per se.

The Honourable Mr. CHUNILAL MEHTA :—Very well then, if that is the case we may just as well provide for free education altogether. Because even if there is a justifiable reason to ask for remission of fees, the demand will be a mark of pauperism. It makes an invidious distinction between men and men. I think it would be extremely hard to work it in practice and as I say if these fees amount to such small figures, it is hardly worth while to quarrel about it. In Bombay itself they amount to Rs. 37,000. So that when you compel a parent to send his child to school, I think you might as well provide that no fees shall be charged. I think the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI pointed out that the definition of "reasonable excuse" is not sufficiently clear. I agree with what the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI says. There is another matter which I should like to mention, section 4 of the bill provides that while the municipalities are prepared to take the initiative, it is left to the education department to see whether they have made adequate provision for the schools or not. Perhaps it might also be provided that no municipality shall undertake compulsory education unless there are about 50 per cent. of the pupils already at school. It stands to reason that if there are only 20 or 25 per cent., it would be a hopeless task to try and compel the other 80 or 75 per cent. to go to school. In conclusion I will again mention that I consider section 18 as important as the principle of the bill. When we especially mention the educational cess which is to be levied by the municipality and we make no mention whatever of the government contribution at the same time, indeed when we affirm that no charge will be imposed on public revenues, the argument would seem to be that the municipality will have to do without government contribution which is very far from the intention.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—I think we might perhaps adjourn till 3 p. m. for lunch.

The Council then adjourned for lunch.

[After lunch.]

The Council re-assembled after lunch at 3 o'clock.

The Honourable SHEIKH GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH:—Your Excellency,—I support the principle of this bill. Although much has been said in its favour, this bill presents one difficulty to my mind, and that difficulty is this: In what language, so far as the Presidency proper is concerned, will primary education be imparted? So far I find a tendency among my co-religionists in the Presidency proper to have primary education imparted to their boys in Urdu.

Now as the bill stands, it might be said that if the Mahomedan members of the municipality do not like to have compulsory primary education owing to its not being imparted in Urdu, they can vote against such a motion. But as the Mahomedans form a minority on the municipality, the municipality can still pass the resolution they desire. A motion under clause 5 could be carried inspite of the two or three Mahomedan members that will be on the municipalities, by two-thirds of the members present. Now if it is carried by two-thirds of the members in spite of the wishes of Mahomedan members, yet the municipality can introduce compulsory education.

Again under section 14 the municipality by two-thirds of the members present can levy any tax for the purpose of the education-cess. Now here too in spite of the Mahomedan members, the municipality can levy that cess. I submit, sir, that looking to clauses 5 and 14, though the Mahomedan members of the municipality may be against the principle of compulsory introduction of primary education, yet the rest of the members of the municipality can do that; and when they can do that, they can say we are not going to have primary education imparted in Urdu. Therefore under those circumstances there is no alternative left to the Mahomedan members but to remain quiet, and therefore I think there is need for an express provision to provide for the above contingency.

As regards compulsion, it might be said that they might come under one of the clauses which exempts their boys from compulsory attendance in the school. But I submit that if they are to be exempted, the very object of the bill will be frustrated, because the object of the bill is to introduce compulsion for the purpose of diffusing elementary education widely amongst the masses.

I will also offer one or two remarks about the school committee. It is a very important committee which has to do very important duties under the act. Therefore I submit that it ought to be a representative body.

With these remarks I support the first reading.

The Honourable Mr. PANDURANG ANANT DESAI :—Your Excellency, with very great pleasure I support the first reading of this important bill. On principle I do not think that any educated man can oppose this bill. Even the worst pessimist would not dare to oppose this bill on principle. It is admitted on all hands that elementary education is necessary for the masses. It is recognized by Government that it is absolutely necessary that the masses should be educated. The nervousness on the part of Government was about two things; the first thing was that the country being principally agricultural, agriculturists would be unwilling to send their boys to school whose services they utilize for their own occupations, namely, tending cattle and doing agricultural work in the fields. Therefore, Government said: "If we compel such agriculturists to send their boys to school and thus deprive them of the services of their own children, we shall have to incur the odium of such men. We are not willing to incur such odium and unpopularity." "Therefore," Government said: "we are not willing to impart elementary education to the masses against their wishes." The second thing about the nervousness of Government was this; Government said: "Here there is a question of cost. Government at present is not in a position to bear any cost on account of this matter." As regards the first point of the nervousness of Government, the honourable mover of the bill has undertaken the responsibility. He is willing to incur the odium. He is willing to be cursed if people would curse him.

Also the municipalities are willing to incur this curse, if curse it would be. Of course, my honourable friend is not afraid, because he is receiving the blessings of every one of us for bringing in this bill before us and there is no doubt that he will receive the blessings of the agriculturists when they benefit by the education of their children. So, as far as that question of odium is concerned, Government is free from it. The second question is the most important question, namely, the cost of this enterprise. The honourable mover said to us that both section 16 and section 18 have been inserted in this bill at the instance of the local Government as well as the Government of India. Now when I read these sections I feel somewhat nervous, because your Excellency will see that having regard to the financial conditions of all the municipalities in the Presidency not a single municipality is in a position to bear the total expenditure which the municipality shall have to incur on account of this matter. The condition of illiteracy is most remarkable. Yesterday in connection with another meeting I got certain statistics supplied by the divisional Commissioners. There was a question before Mr. ORR'S committee with respect to the percentage of literate to illiterate persons among the voters of municipalities. There your Excellency will find the percentage in certain cases is appalling. I am specially referring to my own district, Bijapur, which is most backward in point of education. In my district the municipality of Bijapur has got the percentage of 56 illiterate to 44 literate. The municipality of Guledgud has got 71 illiterate to 29 literate. The municipality of Ilkal has got 75 illiterate to 25 literate.

The Honourable Mr. CURTIS:—Are these males or males and females?

The Honourable Mr. DESAI:—I think these include both males and females, but this will be a certain guide to us that the percentage of illiterate is not insignificant and that it is appalling. Therefore I say that the question of cost would be a difficult one and the insertion of these two clauses, namely 16 and 18 of the bill, at the instance of Government, might perhaps lead to some difficulty. The municipalities, if the permission is given by Government and a notification is issued under section 3, shall have to make a demand on Government. They would ask Government to make a contribution in this matter and Government might say possibly that the understanding at the time when this bill was discussed was that Government had not to pay a single pie on this account and that the whole cost was agreed to be borne by the municipalities themselves. I think it is absolutely necessary at this stage that we, the non-official members, should place on record our say with respect to this matter. I say that, though sections 16 and 18 are in the bill, our understanding is not that the whole cost is to be borne by the municipalities. It does not prevent the municipalities from making demands on Government in this connection and I am sure that unless Government comes to the aid of the municipalities it would be impossible for all the municipalities in the Presidency to undertake this enterprise. Of course, it will be welcome if any municipalities are in a position to bear the expenditure. They might introduce this measure in their district without outside help in that event.

Now there is another thing that I wish to point out. Section 3 of this bill says:—"The municipality in any municipal district constituted under the principal act may with the previous sanction of the local government declare by notification that primary education shall be compulsory in such district." Now this section contemplates that before any municipality is empowered to issue a notification it shall have to satisfy Government that it is in a position to introduce this measure in its own district, and Government then may say to the municipality; "unless you are in a position to bear the whole of the expenditure we are not giving you the sanction which is required by section 3"; and then this bill would be a dead letter. Therefore my submission is that there should be no understanding that by these clauses, namely 16 and 18, the municipalities are debarred from making a demand for a contribution from Government. At present the state of things is this, that whatever the municipality spends on primary education, a certain contribution—generally one-half—is borne by the local government. In the same way we shall have to ask the assistance of the local government in this matter.

The honourable mover of the bill has provided in section 14 for an education cess. He says: "Where a notification under section 3 is in force in any municipal district, the municipality may impose a tax, hereinafter called an 'education cess'." This cess will to a certain extent enable every municipality to bear a certain proportion of the expenditure which they shall have to incur in this matter, but that will not be enough. In case this cess is not enough and in case the municipality is not in a position to bear the whole expenditure, it shall have to take the assistance of Government in this matter and I say then Government should not hide themselves behind these clauses 16 and 18. They should not say: "Well, you have undertaken to bear the whole expenditure, now we are not in a position to give you anything,": because if that is the understanding, even if the bill is passed, it would be a dead letter. No municipality to my knowledge will be able to bear the whole expenditure on this account. Therefore I say that at the time of the discussion in the select committee this should be seriously considered by them and the member in charge of the bill.

Then as regards other matters about which there was some nervousness, the bill provides several safeguards. The first safeguard, as I have said, is that before the notification is issued application will have to be made to the local government and sanction of the local government has to be obtained. That is a healthy safeguard. Then the second safeguard is that if any municipality thinks, having regard to the number of the girls or to the position of female education, that this bill should be applied only to boys, the municipality is empowered to do so. There is not the rule that when this bill is introduced in any particular municipal area, it should be applied both to boys and girls at the same time. It is discretionary. Then the next safeguard is that a municipality before it makes an application to Government is to make provision for primary education. Here the municipality will have to take into consideration its own position, because unless the municipality makes provision for primary education, namely, about the staff, buildings and other things, it will not move Government for its sanction. Then as regards the punishment which is to be meted out to defaulters, namely, the parents or guardians. Of course, first a warning is to be given and then a man is to be taken before a magistrate, and then the magistrate prescribes a certain period and asks the parent or guardian to send his child to school within that period. If he fails to do so, then the punishment is a fine which may extend to three rupees. He may be fined one anna, two annas, three annas or four annas, or more, according to circumstances.

Then there is a provision about the complaints of the school committee. Of course, this safeguard is most important, because it is not left to one individual, namely, to one member of the municipality, to decide whether a prosecution is to be made or not. It is left to the discretion of the school committee and the school committee consists of four or five members. They will take into consideration all the circumstances and then, if they think it right, they may bring a complaint. Then a provision is also made for the remission of fees. A resolution was brought by the Honourable Mr. PATEL in this Council about free and compulsory education, and at the time the honourable member in charge of the education department had said that it is not proper that his son or a pleader's son or a judge's son should go to school and should not be charged with fees. In order to meet that objection provision has been made in this bill that in certain cases where the parent or guardian goes to the headmaster or the head of the institution and says that he is unable to pay the fees—of course, his word is to be taken—he is not to be charged with fees for his boy. Now it might be said that this would be a loose provision, because persons might come and say to the headmasters that they are unable to pay although they are able, but we must look to the self-respect of the men. For the sake of one anna or two annas I do not think men will come forward and make a false declaration. There may be some false declarations, but we must make allowance for them, because our intention is to make education free as far as possible. So I say there is no danger even if some people make a false declaration in this respect.

Then power is given to the educational authorities of Government to make inspection from time to time, to make suggestions in respect of the staff, buildings, sanitary conditions and so on.

Then I should like to say a word with respect to the suggestion made by the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI. He said that in section 9 it is stated "A parent shall be deemed to have a reasonable excuse for failure to cause a child to attend a recognized primary school where the child is prevented from attending school by sickness or other necessary cause." He objects to this latter phrase "other necessary cause." He says it is necessary to specify the causes You will find in every enactment that some causes are specified and others are not because it is not possible to forecast all the possibilities, and all the difficulties, which might arise! Other reasonable excuse might be that the boy's father or mother is sick, he has to attend, he has to go to the doctor's shop and bring medicine. It might be that the boy is engaged in a marriage ceremony. You cannot specify all the causes in this enactment and therefore some such clause is necessary. Therefore I say that that clause should be retained.

Then my honourable friend, SHEIKH GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH, said that it would be difficult unless it is specified what elementary education is to be given in a primary school. He said things might come to this pass, namely, that there is always a minority of Mahomedans in the municipalities—at least in the Presidency the minority is of Mahomedans—and if in the case of such a municipality two-thirds of the members, who must be Hindus or non-Mahomedans, came to the conclusion that a notification under section 3 of this enactment should be issued making primary education compulsory, that that measure would be introduced against the wishes of the Mahomedans. He says that unless some provision is made to secure the interests of Mahomedans this bill should not be passed. I say there is a provision in this enactment which would secure the interests of the Mahomedans, because before the notification is issued in the particular area the municipality shall have to take the sanction of Government, and Government before they give their sanction will take all these matters into their consideration and if they think that it is safe to introduce this measure, then and then alone would they give their sanction, not otherwise.

These are the few remarks which I wanted to make. Of course, I have said that my object in making these remarks about the cost is purely this. When a demand is made on Government in this connection, Government should not say: "There is clause 18 in the bill, you are not to make a demand on us." I say that it is the understanding of the non-official members that section 18 has been introduced in this bill only because section 80 of the Government of India Act 1915, says that no such bill could be introduced unless it is sanctioned by the local government. In this case, as the bill stands, there is no provision in the bill which says that the finances of Government are taxed. As the honourable mover said, there is no provision in the bill itself which says that any burden is imposed by this enactment on the provincial revenues there was no necessity of section 18 in the bill but the Government of India and the local Government wanted this clause and at their request the same has been inserted by him. I therefore submit that there should be no understanding that the whole cost is to be borne by the municipalities.

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS:—Your Excellency, at the outset I would like to add my tribute of admiration to the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S great labour, perseverance, tenacity and patience with which he has striven after the cause that the bill that is before this Council to-day represents. I think every one in this Council would like to see this bill pass into law, but I also believe that every one would like to safeguard this measure against any complaints from the people for whose benefit it is meant.

To begin with, in the clauses of the bill I do not see any definition which marks out clearly what people of the area that is to be affected by this bill will be included in it. Supposing this bill applies to the municipality of Poona. Suppose that municipality applies to Government to be allowed to introduce compulsory and free education in Poona and Government give their sanction to it. To whom does compulsion apply? Does it apply to every person who stays in Poona for a week or two? As far as I can see in para. 2 where the definition is given, there is no exception made for the population that generally passes through either on short visits or on festive or other occasions. My view of this may be wrong, but as far as I am able to ascertain, no one has pointed out to me anything in the bill which makes an exception in the case of people who come within the area to settle there temporarily. I should like the select committee to bear this in mind and I hope the honourable mover of the bill will also give me some definite information on the point.

The Honourable MR. PATEL:—Has the honourable member read clause 8?

The Honourable Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS:—I would like the words "ordinarily resides" amplified. Supposing a child of 10 years 'ordinarily resides' in that area, is this meant to apply to him? I think the honourable mover will admit that a little more explicit definition would be helpful.

Then we see, as the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI pointed out, that the late Mr. GOKHALE, when he presented to the Imperial Legislative Council his bill on primary education, made a number of exceptions for 'reasonable excuse.' The Honourable Mr. PATEL has, and I think rightly, made provision in a general clause which you find in section 9 (a), the words being "or other necessary causes." I take it that the actual working out will have to be left to the school committee. I have no objection to this, but I wish with the Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI that if this could be made a bit clearer, it would be very helpful.

The main objections and the main suggestions of the honourable members who have spoken on this bill have been on the score of the last two clauses of the bill. We have been told that there are very few municipalities that are in a position to undertake this without Government help. At the same time the honourable mover has told us that this last clause 18 had to be inserted by him before the bill could be allowed to be presented in this Council. It resolves itself into this, my lord, that it is a question of finance. The ways and means for this are mainly, I take it, provided for in clause 14, whereby an education cess is allowed to be levied. I gather from the speeches of my various honourable friends here who have had experience of matters municipal that the question of finance may come seriously in the way. The Honourable Mr. DESAI just now told us that even though this bill should pass into law as it stands, he expects your Excellency to take a note that non-official members wish it to be understood that the whole cost of compulsory education is not to be borne by the municipality and that the bill would not prevent it from making a demand on Government for help. But if the clause stands in the bill as it now does, I do not think his speech will be in any way binding on Government. I, therefore, propose to look at clause 14 a little more closely. If the Government in any way keep back the grant, I take it, sir, that it is very advisable that this Council should put a sort of maximum on the educational cess that is provided for in clause 14. That educational cess I see is to be imposed under section 59 of the main act. Section 59 has several sub-heads, and I would suggest to the select committee to fix a sort of maximum for the education cess, say not to exceed the highest percentage that is imposed under any one of the headings mentioned in section 59 of the main act. I think, sir, that this sort of check or safeguard would be very necessary from a legislative body like this, in spite of our enthusiasm to see primary education made compulsory in India and in this Presidency.

There is one more obvservation that I would like to make in connection with the education cess. There is no provision made as to who should be liable for the education cess. The main act provides for taxation on carriages and other property. I would submit, sir, that if there is going to be an education cess, people who are graduates and who have had education should be asked to subscribe. I think they would be the people who would grudge the least, because it is only fair that those who have benefitted by education should contribute something. I throw out this suggestion for the consideration of the select committee. It has been suggested to me that this education cess should be imposed according to the income tax that each individual pays. I personally object to it most emphatically. Income tax is a tax that no individual would be willing to divulge to anybody else, and I think the less said about it the better it is for us. As it is, you tax the rich people and the property owners heavily. I therefore think the educated people should be brought in, and I think they would not mind it at all. It has also been suggested that as in the case of the Muhammadan suffrage, title-holders should be brought in. I think all these details may be considered by the select committee.

With these few observations on the points that struck me as requiring explanation at the first reading, I give my hearty support to the first reading of the bill.

The Honourable Mr. GOKULDAS KAHANDAS PAREKH:—May it please your Excellency. I heartily support the first reading of this bill. I think the Honourable Mr. PATEL has rendered great service to the country and to this Presidency in particular in introducing this bill before the Council and I also share in the appreciation that he has expressed about the help that he has received in connection with this measure from your Excellency's Government and the Government of India.

Many of my honourable friends referred to several questions of detail in connection with this bill, but I think a measure of this kind may require a considerable amount of alteration. So far as the details are concerned, I think the best thing is that they should be left for being dealt with by the select committee. The only question now before the Council is whether with the conditions as they exist, is it desirable or is it not desirable to make education compulsory in municipal areas where municipalities are prepared to accept the conditions prescribed by the bill, and I should think that there should not be the slightest hesitation that the measure is a very desirable one and will certainly help the advance of education in the country, and the power which is sought to be given by the bill ought therefore to be given.

So far as clause 18 of the bill is concerned, a certain amount of nervousness has been shown by my honourable friend Mr. DESAI, but what appears to me is that in a measure of this kind no Government will bind itself by statute to any sort of financial obligation. I understand that looking to the sympathy which Government always feels for the spread of education and the help it has hitherto been giving, it is certainly not necessary that Government should put it on paper that it binds itself to give particular help to the municipalities which introduce compulsory education. If the municipalities do their work with earnestness for the spread of compulsory education, there ought not to be the slightest doubt that Government will fail to do its own duty. Nobody throws upon Government the statutory duty of helping the local boards and municipalities for the purpose of advancing education. Government do give that help, and that help, I am quite sure, Government would be ready to give when the municipality shows its earnestness by accepting the conditions which have been laid down, and I think that there is not the slightest reason for feeling any nervousness on this point. If the bill is passed, I am sure there will not be any difficulty, so far as financing is concerned, up to the extent to which the resources of Government permit. Therefore, there ought not to be any ground for not accepting the bill, because the liability of Government to bear any share in the expenditure is not specified in the bill.

Then my honourable friend, SHEIKH GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH, raised some question with reference to the acceptance of this bill by the Muhammadan community. I do not think the Muhammadan community need entertain any apprehensions that any injustice would be done to it, as I understand primary education is not intended to be given only in the language of the district, but in the language of the communities, and where there is a Muhammadan community and where the municipality is agreeable to perform the conditions necessary for the introduction of compulsory education, the Muhammadans would be educated in Urdu where Urdu is their home language. It would be certainly attended to and would be regarded as the language of the people. I do not think there is any serious apprehension on this ground, and the bill as it is ought to be read for the first time.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur PIR BAKSH walad MIAN MAHMUD:—Your Excellency, in connection with this bill I have to say a few words only. The working of the bill entirely depends upon the municipalities. Well, sir, I do not think under any circumstances any municipality in the Presidency would be able to undertake the entire maintenance of schools for the purpose of compulsory education. The circumstances of the various municipalities are well known to my honourable friends and I do not think even Karachi, Hyderabad or Sukkur, which are well advanced municipalities, can afford to undertake all the expenses of schools.

The Honourable Mr. HARCHANDRAI VISHINDAS:—I take exception to Karachi.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur PIR BAKSH walad MIAN MAHMUD:—At this time, unless Government comes in to aid the municipalities, I think our discussion on the whole bill will be found worthless. The whole thing depends upon the financial condition of the municipalities.

Another thing is that the bill provides that children of 6 to 10 years of age should be sent to school. Your Excellency is well aware that in this Presidency or in India boys are generally weak and the 4 years' education that they will receive will not serve them in any occupation or profession they want to enter in their after-life. This should be extended to something more than 12 years.

Apart from this I do not think that certain sections are workable without causing inconvenience to the people. In the first place the bill provides that the question of a child's attending a particular school for a particular number of days in the year and the hours of attendance shall be determined by the educational department of Government. I think it is a subject in which the consultation of local officers and councillors of the municipality concerned is inevitably necessary. They are in a better position to know the sentiments and the circumstances of the different classes of the persons living in the municipalities, and I would suggest that this section 2 (i) requires some amendment which I think it is needless for me to suggest at this stage of the bill.

Another point which I wish to bring to your Excellency's notice is that in most of the municipalities business is transacted by a quorum of 10 persons though the number on the board is 30. Under the circumstances, if a resolution regarding application to Government for the extension of primary education to a municipality is resolved by 10 members only, it means that the whole question was not properly discussed by sufficient number of representatives on the board. This section, therefore, ought to be partially amended.

Again, section 10, sub-clauses (1) and (2), deal with the discretion of the magistrates or school committees. Of course there is no appeal against the magistrate's order, and if the parents do not obey the order of the school committee they are to be hauled up before the magistrate for punishment.

The Honourable Mr. PATEL:—The school committee is not empowered to inflict any punishment at all.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur PIR BAKSH:—But you say that they may apply to the magistrate for the prosecution of the defaulter, and there is no provision in this bill entitling the defaulter to appeal to the general body.

Another point that strikes me is the prosecution of the parent of a child. According to the definition of the word parent, it includes the guardian or any person having the charge of a child. Consequently he is liable to be prosecuted if the child fails to attend the school. I am sorry I feel bound to oppose such a provision. In support of this I would only respectfully leave it to your Excellency to judge what consequence would arise from this procedure if a widow or other female belonging to a purdanashin or to a respectable family was the only parent having the care of her child and who failed to send her child to school. She would necessarily appear before a magistrate against custom and against her will. What does it mean? It will suffice on my part to say that she would prefer to commit suicide rather than be dragged to a magistrate's court. Your Excellency can very well imagine with what feelings this would be looked upon by her relatives. It would put the whole community into disgrace. So this section requires some consideration. Apart from this I would point out that it would be rather impossible for any policemen to serve such summons on such a female. I do not think it is a proper legislation and could under the circumstances be accepted.

I only want to add that the bill as it stands requires considerable amendment by the select committee, and bearing all these difficulties and fears in mind I again repeat my remark that if Government does not come to the aid of the municipalities the bill will remain a dead letter.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—I think it will be to the convenience of honourable members if we now adjourn till 11-30 a. m. tomorrow.

The Council then adjourned till 11-30 a. m. on Thursday the 26th July 1917.

His Excellency the President : Order, order. Further discussion of the first reading of a bill to provide for the extension of primary education in municipal districts in the Bombay Presidency other than the City of Bombay (Bill No. 11 of 1917.)

The Honourable Sardar SYED ALI EL EDROOS:—Your Excellency,—It gives me great pleasure in rising to support the bill brought forward by my honourable colleague Mr. PATEL. The question of free and compulsory education, is a question which cannot but find its echoes, in the hearts that have tasted it and reaped its fruits. The policy of free and compulsory education has long been followed by the Western nations and with results which we know too well. It has also been adopted, by some of our enlightened native rulers, and not without success. Baroda and Mysore are two prominent examples. Let us not therefore lag behind, but act up to the advice of Mr. PATEL, and allow such municipalities as can afford to give free and compulsory education, on the lines advocated by him, as an experimental measure. This also solves the problem of extra expenditure on the part of Government. But there is yet another difficulty which requires consideration. The scarcity of trained teachers is well-known. Again there is not a sufficient number of good buildings for the schools and some of those available are not in a good condition. On the whole, I think Mr. PATEL'S is a good plan and argues success. If this bill is passed into law it will be a check on the parent's negligence towards their children, who are so apt to overlook their training. It will be a boon to the backward classes and especially to the Mahomedans, whose peculiar conditions are so deplorable. Let the question of Urdu or other language be kept aside at present, because the changes in the courses and training will remain in the hands of the Government educational department, and they will act according to the wants and requirements of the people. But at present we have to deal with the principles of the bill for free and compulsory education by which, to my mind, Muhammadans will be more benefited in future, because now they are more backward in education than other communities. With these remarks I heartily support the first reading of the bill.

The Honourable Ráo Bahádur VENKATESH SHRINIWAS NAIK:—May it please your Excellency,—I have very great pleasure in supporting the first reading of the bill, so ably and eloquently moved by my friend the Honourable Mr. PATEL. Before discussing the principles of the bill, I feel it my duty to tender my grateful thanks to your Excellency's Government and also to the Government of India for their great kindness in granting the requisite leave, for the introduction of this useful measure of legislation, into our Council, and to congratulate the honourable mover, on the great distinction of bringing in the first private bill, during my as well as his term of office. It is a matter of common knowledge that to the British Government there is nothing dearer and more sacred than the spread of education amongst the teeming millions of this country. Government encourages the diffusion of education of all sorts in this country, to the best of its power and financial ability.

The bill before us, is intended to encourage the principle of self-help in the matter of the spread of primary education, on the part of municipalities in this Presidency. The great principle of compulsory education in this country, for which the late lamented Honourable Mr. GOKHALE strove with all his might underlies the bill of which the first reading is now under our consideration. The acceptance of this principle is to be left by the proposed legislation under this bill to the discretion and good sense of every municipality in this Presidency. The bill is intended as an enabling measure to make it feasible for such of municipalities in this Presidency as may desire to give to the people within their respective jurisdictions the boon of primary education to all children between the ages of 6 and 10. No municipality is to be forced to enforce this measure within its jurisdiction against its will. Though in appearance and in theory clause 18 of the bill which had evoked so much feeling on the part of certain of my colleagues seems not to affect the finances or the revenues of the Presidency as a matter of legal obligation, yet nobody is more certain than myself, that your Excellency's Government will be pleased to give larger grants-in-aid to the municipalities desiring to make education compulsory within their limits, after the unfortunate gigantic struggle in which the British Empire is at present involved is brought to a successful termination, and after the financial stringency is over. I do not entertain any fears whatever that Government will ever shirk its duty to the people entrusted to their care by the merciful Providence and I trust further that Government will be pleased to contribute to each municipality that may choose to benefit itself by the proposed legislation, at least the same amount of money that it may be able to raise by the levy of the special educational cess and by drawing upon a portion of its normal revenue. I hope that Government will be pleased to encourage one municipality after another in the Presidency, to apply for the issue of a notification under section 3 of this bill, by its liberal and generous treatment.

I confess that I was not a little surprised by certain remarks made by my honourable friend Mr. Gulam Husein in his speech yesterday. He seemed to fear that the interests of his co-religionists may suffer if the bill becomes a law. It seemed to me that he was labouring under an erroneous impression that primary education through the medium of languages not understood by the Mahomedans would be forced upon them. My honourable friend and those that share in his fears may rest assured that the children of each community living within the limits of a municipality will be given primary education through the medium of their mother tongue, even after the bill passes into law. There is no reason whatsoever to fear that the interests of the minor communities will suffer in any way under the proposed legislation. I found it very difficult to follow the trend of the speech of my honourable friend Khán Bahádur Pir Baksh. He seemed to entertain exaggerated fears as to the safety of widows and purdanashin ladies who may happen to be guardians of children after the passing of this bill into law. But I make no doubt whatever, that the feelings and customs of such guardians, will be scrupulously respected and safeguarded under the supervision of a watchful and benign Government.

I dare say, that it is not difficult to detect many defects in the bill as it now stands and I freely admit that the bill is capable of considerable amendments in its details, but as the bill has to pass the careful scrutiny of a competent select committee, we must not enter into its details at this stage. After the bill emerges from the select committee it is open to every honourable member of this Council to move amendments if he likes. At present we are only concerned to see if the bill is grounded on sound principles. In my humble opinion, the principles of the bill are thoroughly sound and we may safely pass the first reading of the bill. With these observations I support the first reading of the bill with all my heart.

The Honourable Mr. EBRAHIM HAROON JAFFER:—My lord,—The speakers, who have gone before me, have already pointed out the urgency of introducing the principle of compulsion in elementary education and have shown how the bill before the Council ought to be welcomed by all. I shall not therefore labour this point and attempt to prove what requires no proof. It is, however, necessary to clear away certain misunderstandings with regard to the bill. It is certainly capable of modifications which are necessary, but with regard to its main principles, there ought to be, to my mind, complete agreement among us all. Compulsory primary education is required in the best interests of the country and if anybody will benefit thereby, in particular, backward communites like the Muhammadan community will derive the utmost advantage. In Poona City, hardly half the Muhammadan population of the school-going age are at school. The conditions in the mofussil are still worse. The backwardness of the Muhammadans is mainly due to the illiteracy which prevails among them and they ought heartily to welcome a bill like the one now before the Council. It must be borne in mind that sufficient safeguards have been provided in the bill and in the select committee, more may be introduced if necessary. Details with regard to language and so on may be carefully considered later, but the principle of compulsion must be generally accepted. The fears entertained about the operation of the bill, are useless. The bill is to apply to boys only. In supporting the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S resolution in this behalf at the December session of this Council, I referred to this question of the education of girls and observed that, for some years to come at least the masses of the Muhammadans may not consent to the attendance of girls, and even in the present bill, I am glad to find that my honourable friend has taken this view into consideration and excluded girls from the operations of the bill. I must congratulate the Honourable Mr. PATEL on the bill he has framed and brought before the Council, and I do so on behalf of the Muhammadan community in this Presidency and my own constituency in particular. He has been indefatigable in his efforts to promote the cause of education and it is my duty to offer him my congratulation and heartfelt thanks. With these words, my lord, I support the bill before the Council.

The Honourable Sir DINSHAW MANOCKJEE PETIT:—Your Excellency,—I feel I would be wanting in my duty if I did not openly declare my support to this bill and also if I did not add my humble voice to the chorus that has been raised in this Council of congratulations to the Honourable Mr. PATEL for having introduced into this Council a bill of such far-reaching character. As an employer of labour and as a representative in this Council of an association which is the largest employer of labour in this Presidency and probably in this country, I welcome this measure. It is true that the City of Bombay is excluded from the scope of this bill, but it must be borne in mind that the labouring classes which are employed in the city are drawn from the various parts of the presidency, and therefore the city itself is bound to derive the advantages of this bill to a considerable extent. This bill contains several clauses which require very careful consideration at the hands of the select committee to which it is to be referred, and I have no doubt that they will thresh them out carefully and consider them in all their details before the bill is passed into law.

I have no desire, my lord, to refer to the several clauses and detain this Council further, especially as I have fresh in my mind the ruling which your Excellency gave me at the time of the discussion, in reference to the first reading, of the Bombay Boilers Inspection Bill, that it was not open to the members to discuss at the first reading the various clauses of the bill, but the bill could only be considered on its principle and its general effect. But bearing in mind that on this occasion your Excellency has allowed the different members to refer to the various clauses of this bill, I trust you will allow me to allude to clause 18 of this bill and say that I am afraid this clause if it is allowed to stand as part of this bill may have the effect of nullifying to a considerable extent the object of this bill at the same time. I therefore trust that the select committee will pay particular attention to the question as to whether this clause should be retained in the bill or not.

As regards the general principle of the bill, it would be superfluous for me to say anything in support of it. It is acknowledged beyond any doubt that most of the evils from which we are suffering come from illiteracy, and if we touch this root cause, we will be adding considerably to the progress and welfare of the people of this country.

With these remarks, I fully support the Honourable Mr. PATEL'S bill.

The Honourable Mr. SIDDHANATH DHONDDEV GARUD:—Your Excellency,—I rise to accord my hearty support to the bill and to join the previous speakers in offering my congratulations to the Honourable Mr. PATEL for moving this bill and your Excellency's Government for permitting it to be introduced into this Council. Your Excellency, the general consensus of opinion in this country is in favour of the principle underlying this bill, and I think I need not say anything further to support the principle which has been embodied in this bill. I know there are financial difficulties in the way of carrying out this measure fully, and it will be for your Excellency's Government to meet the financial difficulties as they arise in the case of the various municipalities.

With these remarks, your Excellency, I heartily support this bill.

The Honourable Mr. PHIROZE C. SETHNA:—Your Excellency,—Hardly any more words are necessary in support of the first reading of this bill. Every member who has spoken on the bill on this occasion as also every member who spoke at the last sessions on a resolution to the same effect then before the Council has expressed his views very strongly in favour of the spread of free and compulsory education. In fact, leaders of public opinion throughout this country for years past have tried to convince Government of the importance and the advantage of lowering the percentage of illiteracy in our midst and we in this presidency have therefore every reason to be grateful to your Excellency personally and to your Excellency's Government for according sanction to the bill which the Honourable Mr. PATEL has introduced in this Council.

So far every one has spoken in favour of the bill. The only note of dissent, if it might be called a note of dissent was struck by the Honourable Khán Bahádur PIR BAKSH who said that perhaps a resolution might be carried by a municipality by a sort of snatch vote, but if the Honourable Khán Bahádur reads section 5 carefully he will find that the honourable mover has laid down that a motion in regard to compulsory education cannot be brought forward before any municipality without a special notice and a special general meeting would require to be convened to consider such motion. There is therefore no fear of a snatch vote, and if there is a special meeting held we may always expect a very full debate on the question before it is decided upon. Then again the Honourable Khán Bahádur PIR BAKSH said that the feeling in Sind will run very high so much so that should any municipality compel a child, whose father was not alive to go to school and if in case of failure the mother were to be taken before a magistrate, rather than appear in a court of law she would prefer to commit suicide. Perhaps this is stretching the point too far. Instead of committing suicide she would resort to the alternative of sending the child to school and thus prefer the lesser evil of the two, if attending school be at all considered an evil.

There is one other point, your Excellency, that I wish to refer to in regard to the financial aspect of the question. That I take it is the crux of the whole matter and attention has been drawn to it by several honourable members. The honourable mover has told us that he has not chosen to put in clause 18 of his own accord, but he had to do so on account of the insistence on the part of the Government of India. The insertion of this clause has caused some alarm. The honourable mover told us that if no further monetary support is accorded by Government he for one expects the municipalities to levy what is known as an education cess to carry out the object of this bill. It was pointed out by the Honourable Mr. CHUNILAL MEHTA and very rightly that some of our municipalities are so poor that it would not be possible for them to levy any additional taxation. We would want to know therefore if Government would strictly adhere to clause 18 or it will be possible for us to come forward with a request to Government for the grants to municipalities being enhanced. I hope, sir, that the honourable member in charge of the portfolio of education when he rises to speak on this resolution will make a pronouncement to the effect that in spite of clause 18, should funds permit, Government will be prepared to give additional grants to those municipalities which will enforce compulsory education.

The Honourable Mr. RAGHUNATH PURSHOTTAM PARANJPYE :—Your Excellency,—I rise to support the first reading of this bill and in doing so I wish to put forward this point, that this is the second private bill that has been introduced into this Council. The first private bill that was introduced into this Council by the Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA did not meet with a happy fate, but I hope that this Council will consider this bill in a very favourable light and will pass it as speedily as it possibly can. Several members of this Council have spoken on the various clauses and on the principles of those clauses, but I would request them to consider whether, if they agree with the general principle of the bill, it is worthwhile fighting very much about the details of the bill; otherwise we would let, as it is said, the best be the enemy of the good. If we agree upon its principle and the general desirability of introducing compulsion under certain circumstances, I think we ought not to cavil at particular details. If every member had the choice of drafting a bill himself, he might possibly have it slightly different, but on the whole, we ought to meet each other to a certain extent and I hope that no special objection will be raised to the various details of the bill. I am sure that the select committee will take into consideration all the difficulties that have been raised and any others which any members or any public bodies might bring to the notice of the select committee, and I am sure they will consider these very carefully.

I am not particularly diffident about the operation of the financial clause, although I should have been glad if it were not considered necessary to insert such a clause. I myself, on reading the seventeen sections of this bill, do not find that there is any single clause to show that Government is bound to spend a single pie, but if legal technicalities require that a saving clause is required, I have no objection to let it stand. There is no harm even if that clause stands and takes away from Government any legal or statutory obligation for financial aid. I do not think that there will be any difficulty in moving in this Council a resolution that such and such a grant should be made or set apart in a particular year for helping those municipalities who introduce this compulsion principle. I do not believe that your Excellency will debar any private or non-official member of this Council from moving a resolution of that kind. If any member feels any doubt about it, the select committee might consider whether it is not worthwhile inserting another saving clause in this bill, somewhat to this effect: "Nothing in this bill shall prevent any municipality from applying for an increased grant from Government for bringing in compulsion as embodied in this bill." On this account I am not afraid of that last saving clause, clause 18.

As regards other points that have been raised, I think the select committee will consider them. But I might point out, with reference to my honourable friend, Mr. GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH'S remarks, that his objection about the question of language in the case of Mahomedan students in rural areas does not seem to me to have much weight. There is a clause in the bill which requires the educational department to see whether proper arrangements have been made for imparting education. If there is in any municipality a considerable number of people whose mother tongue is Urdu, I am sure the educational department will first of all see whether a proper provision has been made for imparting education through their mother tongue. I go further still and think that, if occasionally it happens that in a large town there are only four or five families speaking Urdu and it is not possible for the municipality to make special provision for them, the school attendance committee will, if the guardians of those children think that it is a sin to get primary education through the medium of other languages, consider their case favourably and will excuse the children from attending school for this or in fact for any other necessary cause. I do not think that such a contingency will arise, but I am sure that the Honourable Mr. PATEL has taken every possible precaution in the opinion of some of us too many precautions in getting this very desirable measure of compulsory education introduced. I am, however, not quarrelling about these precautions, because I have every hope that once the principle of compulsion is accepted this principle will be extended further and further until, within a not very long period, the whole presidency will be permeated with the idea of compulsion, not only in municipalities but local board and all other areas.

With these words, your Excellency, I have great pleasure in supporting the first reading of this bill.

The Honourable Mr. BALKRISHNA SITARAM KAMAT:—Your Excellency,—While heartily supporting the principle of the bill now before the Council, I wish to refer only to the last clause, namely, clause 18, to which reference has already been made by my honourable friends, Mr. PAREKH and Mr. PARANJPYE, who say that although it would be preferable not to have section 18 in the bill, still it would do no harm if it is allowed to remain. Well, on principle, I take the strongest objection to section 18. It is a saving clause which has perhaps been suggested by the legal department, but I should be very glad indeed to hear whether the suggestion emanated from the Government of India first, or whether it was suggested to the Government of India by the legal department of the Government of Bombay and since approved by the Government of India. The whole point is whether section 80, sub-clause (2), of the Government of India Act, 1915, bears the interpretation necessitating the insertion of such a clause. Section 80, sub-section (2), of the Government of India Act, as far as I can read it, is intended to point out what business can be transacted in a local legislative council, what measures could be introduced. It only says that it shall not be lawful for any member to introduce a measure which has any connection with the public revenues without the sanction of the local Government. That refers to the introduction of a bill only. From the marginal note "Business at meetings," it is perfectly clear that both these clauses (1) and (2) only indicate what business could be transacted and what business could not be transacted, and in sub-clause (2) we are told that if a bill has any connection with public revenues or if it imposes any charge on public revenues, then the introducer of the bill shall take the previous sanction of the Governor. The whole spirit of this clause refers to the introduction into this Council of a bill. It does not mean, to my mind at any rate, that every private bill introduced by a non-official member should have a label, as it were, attached to it indicating that notwithstanding anything contained in the bill such and such a thing will follow. If we accept that interpretation of sub-clause (2), all that will follow is this: every bill introduced by a private member will have to be labelled with this saving clause; in fact, it will become a formula, as it were, of each and every private bill, and I do not think that sub-section (2) of section 80 bears that interpretation. I therefore think that section 18 ought to be expunged from the bill entirely. Once, of course, permission to introduce a bill is granted, there is no necessity to tack on this section to every private bill. Besides I think there are other safeguards in the bill itself which make the saving clause totally unnecessary. For instance the Honourable Mr. PATEL has provided that it lies in the hands of the local Government to give or to refuse permission to a municipality to issue a notification making primary education compulsory. Well, if Government at the time when an application from any particular municipality is received think that that municipality seeks to impose any charge on the public revenues, it lies in the hands of the Government to refuse permission. That is a sufficient safeguard. Then again there is a second safeguard, that even after giving that permission if it is found that that municipality is not able to stand financially upon its own legs, so far as the educational expenditure is concerned, then it lies under the sections in this bill in the hands of Government to cancel the notification and withdraw the compulsory eduction from its area. Both these are sufficient safeguards in my opinion and I do not think that the bill should include a saving clause, namely section 18. Furthermore, it is not prefectly equitable to my mind why we should have a saving clause in the bill. The Honourable MR. PATEL does not throw upon the Government any statutory burden to give any grants; at least no statutory provision is made in the bill itself. Yet Government have the fullest control of all the municipal schools. He proceeds to say that even the schools maintained by any municipality where compulsion has been introduced are liable to inspection at the hands of the educational department. School hours, curriculum, and practically everything will have to be according to the standard approved of by the educational department. Although he has given these two safeguards, yet Government want to keep in their hands still further a special reserve power, as it were, to say that they are under no circumstances bound or are under the least liability, limited or unlimited, to give any grant to any municipality. I think the insertion of this clause would affect not only this particular primary education bill, but it may apply perhaps to all bills brought forward by non-official members. This sort of power is rather unsafe. It only means that in connection with any bill which a non-official member wishes to introduce and which has the remotest connection with public revenues he shall have to admit into the body of the act a saving clause in each and every case. That is not in my humble opinion, the interpertation of sub-clause (2) of section 80; otherwise it would be impossible—I am speaking only on principle—for any non-official member to inroduce any legislation which can be construed to have a remote connection with the public revenues, without the necessity of adding in each case such sort of clause. Therefore, not only in the interests of this primary education bill, but in the interests of the right and privilege of non-official members to introduce, subject no doubt to the sanction of the local Government or the Government of India, bills having reference to public revenues, I think it is necessary that section 18 of this bill should be expunged altogether.

The Honourable Mr. DATTATRAYA VENKATESH BELVI:—Your Excellency,—I think I should add my feeble voice to the chorus of congratulations which your Excellency's Government and the honourable mover of the bill have been accorded by more speakers than one. I congratulate your Excellency's Government on the fact that it has availed itself of the earliest opportunity of emerging from what I consider to be an unenviable position into which it had landed itself in December last by rejecting the resolution of my honourable friend Mr. PATEL on leaving it to the option of municipalities to make primary education free and compulsory within their limits. I believe I am echoing the sentiments of the people of this presidency when I say that the attitude, I should say the illiberal attitude, which was then adopted by your Excellency's Government came as a painful surprise to the presidency as a whole. We, non-official members, never expected that there would be such an impenetrable wall of opposition offered to us by Government, but fortunately for us we found the Honourable Mr. PATEL a persistent worker who was able to wear down the opposition of even Government. My honourable friend Mr. PATEL deserves our congratulations for various reasons. Mr. Patel is nothing if he is not indomitable and persevering.

Now as to the principle of the bill, I do not believe there can be any divergence of opinion. The main principle which underlies this bill is the principle of introducing compulsion into matters educational. Is it or is it not right to compel a parent or guardian to educate his child or ward? That is the one question with the consideration of which we are at present concerned. We find that in all civilised countries universal and compulsory primary education has been found to be absolutely necessary and civilisation has been based more upon universal education than on anything else, not only in England, not only on the continent of Europe, but also in other civilised countries such as Japan. We are unfortunately very much behind these civilised countries and are only now awakening to our position as regards matters educational. The late Mr. Gokhale, an illustrious patriot, did his best to introduce compulsory and free education into this country, but unfortunately for us his efforts did not meet with success. But what the Honourable Mr. GOKHALE could not achieve as a whole, will now be achieved piecemeal by gentlemen like the Honourable Mr. PATEL in the Bombay Legislative Council and by other non-official members in other legislatures in the continent of India. I was glad to read only yesterday that a similar bill is very soon to be introduced into the Legislative Council in the Madras Presidency. That is a matter of sincere congratulation not only to me, but to all my non-official colleagues.

I have already said that there cannot possibly be any divergence of opinion as to the main principle underlying this bill, but fears have been expressed in this Council by more than one speaker as to the attitude which Government may take up hereafter if clause 18 were allowed to pass into law. I do not entertain any such fears at all. In the first place I do trust and hope that section 18 of the present bill will not survive the ordeal of a select committee, but if it does, it will be for such of us as may not be on the select committee, to see that it is pruned off. Even if we fail in expunging it altogether, yet I have a robust faith in the generosity of Government. Whatever may be the law, the British people in this country will do their utmost to extend primary education. I do not believe that Government will ever take its stand upon a legal technicality when it is asked to liberally contribute towards the expansion of primary education in this country, because I know as a matter of fact that a mandate has been given, not only to the people but to every public servant of this country by such a high authority as His Imperial Majesty the King-Emperor of India. When His Imperial Majesty visited this country last, he commanded the people of India to hope, unite and educate. These are the three words which he asked us to very solemnly remember. That is what we are doing. We trust that education will be in course of time universal in this country, we have already tried and done our best to unite amongst ourselves and we do hope that freedom and education will soon come to every household in this country.

His Imperial Majesty was pleased to command that an additional grant of 50 lakhs of rupees a year be given to the people of this country for promoting the cause of primary education. The Government of Bombay got for some years a contribution from the Government of India for the diffusion of primary education out of this royal bounty. It is only owing to the unfortunate circumstance that the empire has been drawn into a gigantic struggle with powerful enemies that that contribution has now been stopped, and unfortunately for us Government have not been able during the last two years to open the new primary schools which they had promised to do. We know that your Excellency's Government has already declared its intention to open at least 500 new primary schools every year in this presidency. But for this war there would have been 1,500 schools added to the list of schools in the presidency during the last three years. I do not believe that Government will ever take its stand upon technicalities, and my firm belief is that wherever the British flag flies the cause of freedom and the cause of education must advance. It is but too true that there are at times some Englishmen in India who are reactionaries and who try to hold us back in our onward march, but a time does come sooner or later when every Briton must come forward and advocate the expansion of education and freedom, among us.

If this bill fortunately proves a success, it is very likely that a similar bill may be introduced for permitting district local boards to make education compulsory in selected places within their jurisdiction. We know there are many taluka towns where there are no municipalities and where it is not possible under the present bill for any taluka town to avail itself of the provisions of this beneficent measure. But that is a matter of some distance of time. I only point to the great possibilities which lie hidden within the bosom of this bill and I trust that your Excellency's Government will give this bill its whole-hearted support and make its passage through the Council easy.

Various clauses of the bill before us have been dealt with by some of my honourable colleagues and several defects in the bill have been pointed out. I do not mean to say that the bill is one which does not admit of any improvement or amendment at all. It is susceptible of amendments, but we must wait and see what the select committee will do. If we do not find that the select committee gives to the bill a form which is acceptable to every one of us, it is open to us to make suggestions at the proper time to bring it into harmony with our ideas, but that is a matter with which we need not at present trouble ourselves. What we are concerned with at present is whether the principle of the bill is or is not sound. In my humble opinion it is perfectly sound and I repeat my congratulations to my honourable friend. The principle apparently seems to be very small, but it is really a very great principle indeed. Great things, it is said, have very often small beginnings and the present instance is one of that kind.

It seems to me that the bill only permits certain municipalities in the presidency to make, if they please, primary education compulsory in their own area, but when once that principle is accepted, a time may come when another bill may be introduced making it compulsory upon every municipality and, for the matter of that, upon every institution of local self-government to provide for free and compulsory education within its limits. The honourable mover of the bill has made it wisely optional in this bill to make or not to make education free on the part of a municipality within its jurisdiction. It may or may not do so, but it is a great thing that a municipality, if it likes, should be permitted to compel people to give education to their children and make that education free if it can do so.

PRIMARY EDUCATION BILL.

[26TH JULY 1917.] [Mr. Abdul Kadir alias Fakir Mahomed walad Ibrahim Khan; Mr. H. S. Lawrence.]

With these few observations I support this bill with all my heart.

The Honourable Mr. ABDUL KADIR alias FAKIR MAHOMED walad IBRAHIM KHAN PATHAN:—Your Excellency,—It has been observed by some of my honourable friends that there is some opposition on the part of the Mahomedan community to the bill now before the Council. I therefore feel compelled that I should join as a member of the Mahomedan community in according my support to this bill and I beg to bring to your Excellency's notice that the Presidency Mahomedan Educational Conference recently met at Dhárwâr, which was attended by not less than 300 delegates from different parts in the presidency, and they have unanimously passed a resolution asking Government to introduce free and compulsory education in the Presidency. If any community is going to be benefited by the introduction of universal free and compulsory education, it is the Mahomedan community and if any proof is required to show that compulsion will do good to the Mahomedan community, one has simply to pass through Mahomedan streets of big cities like Bombay and he will find Mahomedan boys playing with pebbles, playing kites and smoking cigarettes, and so on.

Finding as I do that some of my friends have removed the fears which were expressed by the Honourable Mr. GHULAM HUSSEIN HIDAYATALLAH and Khán Bahádur PIR BAKSH, I do not think I should take the time of the Council longer. But apart from that the only fear expressed by the Honourable Mr. HIDAYATALLAH was that, if compulsion were introduced in a municipality for primary education, it is very likely that in the absence of Mahomedan representation in the Council the two-third majority of the municipal council would force compulsion on the Mahomedans without consulting Mahomedan wishes. Apart from this question of due Mahomedan representation in municipal bodies as well as local bodies, which will I am sure receive consideration at the hands of your Excellency's Government, as well as this Council, and particularly in view of the provisions of this bill which enables a municipality to levy an education cess, as a matter of fact, I would welcome compulsion even against the wishes of the Mahomedan community. Of course, the Honourable Mr. GHULAM HUSSEIN has told us that the municipalities have power to introduce compulsion without consulting Mahomedan wishes and perhaps it is very likely that they will levy a cess to introduce this compulsion. I must assure my honourable friend that wherever there is a considerable number of Mahomedan inhabitants in a municipal area, there are generally Urdu schools and as my honourable friend has been assured by the Honourable Ráo Bahádur NAIK, I think the municipality cannot interfere with the form of instruction and if the municipality in any way interfere with the medium of instruction, it would be for Government in the education department to see that there is an adequate number of primary schools, and that the proper medium of instruction is used for the different communities. I, therefore, on behalf of the Mahomedan community which I have the honour to represent in this Council, accord my hearty support and at the same time congratulate Government with feelings of gratefulness for permitting the Honourable Mr. PATEL to introduce this bill.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE:—Your Excellency,—I am moved to offer a few remarks on this bill chiefly by the reception which this Council gave to the speech of the Honourable Mr. PIR BUKSH.

Many members evidently thought that the honourable member was jesting, or at the least using the language of violent exaggeration, when he depicted the grave consequences that would follow upon the compulsion of purdah-nishin women to appear before an attendance committee or a magistrate. Sir, I am persuaded that the honourable member spoke in complete seriousness, and that he represented views which will be held most tenaciously by a large section of his co-religionists.

PRIMARY EDUCATION BILL.

[Mr. H. S. Lawrence; Dr. C. Fernandes.] [26TH JULY 1917.]

References have been made to the bill which the late lamented Mr. Gokhale placed before the Imperial Council. It was a great misfortune, in my humble opinion, that it was rejected on the first reading, and not referred to a select committee. That was in March 1912; and we are still in the same state of uncertainty as to the reception that this law will obtain from the people as the Imperial Council was in five years ago. Members of this Council have no doubt studied the discussion in the Imperial Council, but I venture to remind them that that bill was strenuously opposed by several Mahomedan councillors; and even those who accepted the principle of the bill maintained that certain safeguards were necessary, and that unless those safeguards were inserted in the bill by the select committee, it would be impossible for Mahomedan representatives to accept the bill. This emphatic view was expressed by a gentleman from Bombay, whose judgment is, I believe, held in high esteem by certain members of this Council. I refer to the Honourable Mr. JINNAH. This point of view is of considerable importance to the province of Sind, and I venture to express the hope therefore that in the select committee which will be appointed to consider this bill the Mahomedan case may be fully considered.

I would ask permission to draw attention to the principles underlying clauses 4 and 14 of this bill. A municipality must first get a certificate from the educational department that they have made sufficient provision for the new influx of pupils; they must then induce Government to issue a notification; and only after they have done so can they introduce an education cess. Now, many towns would not be in a position to finance new schools and to train new teachers from their existing revenue, and so the procedure suggested would land them in a deadlock; they could not get sanction to the notification, because they have not got the money, they have not got the money, because they have not got the sanction for the notification. I trust that this point, which appears to me vital to the success of the measure, may be set right in the select committee.

Certain members appear to advocate this bill in a very light-hearted manner. If I understood their views aright, they said in effect: "Let us pass this bill; and gain great merit by being the first to introduce compulsory education in India. We leave the enforcement of the measure to Government, and if it proves a dead letter or gives rise to trouble, that is the affair of Government." That cannot be applauded as the attitude of responsible legislators.

Government in this country have hitherto refrained most scrupulously from interference in the domestic concerns of the people. This measure is intended to control the relations of parents and children, and will affect every home in the selected localities in a manner never yet dreamt of by the people.

I submit, sir, that we must select our localities with the greatest care. I do not oppose this bill. I approve of the measure most fully; and I wish to see the defects of this bill removed in the select committee. This bill must be made far more elastic in its provisions; to enable small areas to be selected; to enable separate communities to set up their own attendance commitees; and so on; and if this measure is to be fruitful of benefit to the country, it will require the best service that every man can give in thoughtful and zealous consideration, and above all in good will.

The Honourable Dr. C. FERNANDES:—Your Excellency,—As this bill is of such far-reaching utility and as its fate is being watched with keen interest and warm enthusiasm, I feel that I shall be failing in my duty to the people of the presidency if I did not give articulate support to the first reading of the bill. As various speakers have already made valuable suggestions for the consideration of the select committee, I do not wish to detain the Council with any lengthy remarks. I wish however to make one suggestion. The bill provides for an enquiry at the hands of magistrates in certain cases. Such an enquiry will, I am afraid, be looked upon with disfavour. Besides, convictions by magistrates are looked upon by the generality of the Indian public and generally by those from out of whom such cases must arise, as a stain on their reputation, though such a view would be difficult to be appreciated by the educated classes. To avoid this I would suggest another equally effective but far less objectionable machinery, namely, that a bench of the president and vice-president of the municipality, who owe their position to the confidence of their brother councillors, should be entrusted with the power to dispose of such cases without any appeal being provided against their decision. With these words I cordially support the first reading of this bill.
